war-wasted (wâr-wás'ted), a. Wasted or devastated by war. Coleridge.

war-wearied (wâr'wér'id), a. Wearied by war; fatigued by fighting.

The honourable captain there

Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 4. 18.

war-whip (wâr'hwhip), n. Same as scorpion, 5.
war-whoop (wâr'höp), n. A whoop or yell of a particular intonation, raised as a signal for attack, and to strike terror into the enemy: used generally with reference to the American Indians.

Well-known and terrific war-whoop.

J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxx.

They never raise the war-whoop here,

And never twang the bow.

Bryant, White-Footed Deer.

warwickite (wâr'wik-it), n. [< Warwick (see def.) + -ite<sup>2</sup>.] A borotitanate of magnesium and iron, occurring in dark-brown to black acicular crystals embedded in granular limestone. Named from the locality of its occurrence, near Warwick, New York.

He [Edward I.], with another engine named the warwolf, pierced with one stone, and cut as even as a thread, two vaunt-mures.

Camden, Remains, Artillery, p. 206.

The war-wolfs there

Hurl'd their huge stones.

Southey, Joan of Arc, viii.

war-worn (wâr'wörn), a. Worn with military service; especially applied to a veteran soldier, or one grown old in arms.

The stout old general whose battles and campaigns are over, who has come home to rest his war-worn limbs, . . . what must be his feelings?

Be wary then; best safety lies in fear.

Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 43.

Are there none here?

Let me look round; we cannot be too wary.

Fletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 5.

All things work for good, and tend to make you more wary.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

2. Guarded; careful as to doing or not doing something; chary.

Yet this I can say, I was very wary of giving them occasion, by any unseemly action, to make them averse to going on pilgrimage.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

3. Characterized by caution; guarded.

And in

Wary hypocrisy lets slip her hand

Much farther than she seemed to understand.

J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 156.

It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;

And that craves wary walking. Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 15.

4. Prudent; circumspect; wise.

Neither is it safe, or varie, or indeed Christianly, that the French King, of a different Faith, should afford our nearest Allies as good protection as we.

Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

 10. To wash one's face with the Lord's face.

These dainties must be washed down well with wine,
 With a dash of sugar, eggs & mackintosh.
 Jones' Washes (E. T. S.), p. 87.

I don't want my wreck to be washed up on one of the beaches in company with devil's-aprons, bladder-weeds, dead horse-shoes, &c.
 O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, vii.

7. To cover with a watery or thin coat of color;
 tint lightly, thinly, or evenly, in water-color, with a pigment so mixed as to be very fluid and rapidly and smoothly applied.—8. To overlay with a thin coat or deposit of metal: as, to wash copper or brass with gold.

Those who were cunning in "the Art of making Black Bage," which are shillings or other pieces of Money made out of Powder, double Wash'd.
 J. A. Jones, Social Life in the Reign of Queen Anne, II. 225.

9. In mining, metal, etc., to separate from the earthy and lighter matters by the action of water: as, to wash gold; to wash ores. Washing is a common expression used in the most general way, as nearly an equivalent for ore-dressing, or the separation of ore from the gangue with which it is generally mixed. The term washing is, however, more especially used to designate the separation of gold from the detrital formation in which it so frequently occurs. The same term is also commonly employed to designate the process of separating coal from various impurities which frequently occur intermingled with it, such as shale, pyrites, argillaceous iron ore, gypsum, etc. The machines by which this is done are called gold-washers. Washing is also the term in general use for designating the operation of cleansing the ore when, as is frequently the case, it comes from the mine mixed with clay or dirt (material which cannot properly be called gangue). This is a coarse operation, which is sometimes a necessary preliminary to the operations of sizing and dressing, or concentrating, as sometimes called. To wash one's hands off. See hand.

II. intrans. 1. To perform the act of ablution on one's own person.

I will go wash;
 And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush or no.
 Shak., Cor., i. 9. 69.

2. To cleanse clothes in or with water.

I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.
 Shak., M. W. of W., i. 4. 101.

3. To stand the operation of washing without being destroyed, spoiled, or injured: said both of fabrics and of dyes: as, a dress that will not wash; colors that do not wash well.

I had no idea your mousseline-de-laine would have washed so well. Why, it looks just out of the shop.
 C. Reale, Love me Little, x.

4. Hence, to stand being put to the proof; stand the test;
 prove genuine, reliable, trustworthy, capable, or fit, when submitted to trial. [Colloq.]

He's got pluck somewhere in him. That's the only thing after all that'll wash, ain't it?
 T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 2.

 or break of waves upon a shore.

Katie walks
 By the long wash of Australasian seas.
 Tennyson, The Brook.

4. The rough or broken water left behind by a vessel as it moves along: as, the wash of the steamer nearly filled the boat.—5. The licking or lapping noise made by rippling water as it comes in contact with a boat, a pier, the strand, or the like; the swish-swash of water disturbed as by wind or by ebb or flow.

The water ebbs away with a sulky wash in the hollow places.
 R. D. Blackmore, Maid of Sker, iii.

6. A piece of ground washed by the action of the sea or river, or sometimes overflowed and sometimes left dry;
 a shallow part of a river or arm of the sea; also, a morass or marsh; a bog; a fen; a quagmire.

Half my power this night,
 Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
 These Lincoln Washes have devoured them.
 Shak., K. John, v. 6. 41.

7. Substances collected and deposited by the action of water, such as alluvium.

The wash of pastures, fields, commons, and roads, where rainwater hath a long time settled, is of great advantage to all land.
 Mortimer, Husbandry.

The debris-piles which stretch along the lower slopes of the ranges in the Cordilleran Region are locally known as washes.
 J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 125.

8. Waste liquor containing the refuse of food, collected from the cleansed dishes, etc., of a kitchen, such as is often given to pigs; swill or swillings.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar . . .
 Swills your warm blood like wash.
 Shak., Rich. III., v. 2. 9.

Wrinkles like troughs, where swine-deformity swills
 The tears of perjury, that lie there like wash Fallen from the slimy and dishonest eye.
 Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, ii. 1.

9. In distilling: (a) The fermented wort, from which the spirit is extracted. The grain ground and infused is called the mash, the decanted liquor is called the wort, and the wort when fermented becomes the wash. (b) A mixture of dunder, molasses, scummings, and water, used in the West Indies for distillation. Bryan Edwards.—
 10. A liquid used for application to a surface or a body to cleanse it, color it, or the like—especially a thin and watery liquid, as distinguished from one that is glutinous or oily.
 Specifically—(a) A liquid used for toilet purposes, such as a cosmetic, a liquid dentifrice, or a hair-wash.

My eyes are none of the best since I have used the last new wash of mercury-water.
 Wycherley, Love in a Wood, iv. 2.

It [modesty] renders the face delightfully handsome;
 is not subject to be rubbed off, and cannot be paralleled by either wash, powder, cosmetic, etc.

Addison, Spectator, No. 547.
 (b) In med., a lotion. (c) A thin even coating of color spread over a surface, as of a painting. See def. 11.

There is no handsomeness
 But has a wash of pride and luxury.
 Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iii. 3.

By this is seen who lives by faith and certain knowledge, and who by credulity and the prevailing opinion of the age; whose virtue is an unchangeable grain, and whose of a slight wash.
 Milton, Church-Government, i. 7.

(d) In zool., a light or slight surface-coloration, as if

 Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 78.

Each smack takes about 40 wash of whelks with her for the voyage.
 Encyc. Brit., IX. 256.

14. A fictitious kind of sale, disallowed on the stock and other exchanges, in which a broker who has received orders from one person to buy and from another person to sell a particular amount or quantity of some particular stock or commodity simply transfers the stock or commodity from one principal to the other and pockets the difference, instead of executing both orders separately to the best advantage in each case, as is required by the rules of the different exchanges. [Stock-exchange slang.]

Black wash. See black wash.—Eye-wash, collyrium.
 Rain-wash. (a) A washing along or away by the force of rain; displacement effected by rainfall.

He was sceptical as to the lacustrine origin of these breccias. Why not subaerial, like those in the interior of Asia?—subangular masses, transported by rainwash to a distance of 10 or 12 miles.
 W. L. Blanford, Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV. 38.

Wash, n. [< wash, v.] 1. A liquid used for application to a surface or a body to cleanse it, color it, or the like—

Wash, v. [< wash, v.] 20. Black wash. See black wash.—Eye-wash, collyrium.—Rain-wash. (a) A washing along or away by the force of rain; displacement effected by rainfall.

(b) That which is moved by the force of rain; a deposit formed by rain.

Portions of the drift and of the overlying head or rain-wash.

Red wash. (a) A lotion composed of corrosive sublimate, red sulphur of mercury, and creosote, in water. (b) Bates's camphorated water, made by adding copper sulphate, Armenian bole, and camphor to boiling water, and then straining. — Tooth-wash, a liquid dentifrice. White wash, Goulard's lotion; lead-water. — Yellow wash, a lotion prepared by dissolving 30 grains of corrosive sublimate in one pint of lime-water.

wash (wosh), v. [wash, v. (cf. washy); perhaps < **wasch* for wasch.] Washy; weak; easily losing its qualities.

Faith, 'tis but a wash scent.

Marston, What you Will, l. 1.

Their bodies of so weak and wash a temper.

Fletcher, Bend Sin, iv. 1.

'Tis a wash knave; he will not keep his flesh well.

Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

washable (wosh'ā-bl), a. [wash + -able.] Resisting or enduring washing; noting the fabric, and also the color.

Like washable beaver hats that improve with rain, his nerves were rendered stouter and more vigorous by showers of tears.

Dickens, Oliver Twist, xxvii.

wash-ball (wosh'bāl), n. A ball of soap sometimes combined with cosmetics.

We furnish'd ourselves with wash-balls, the best being made here, and being a considerable commodity.

Emlyn, Diary, May 21, 1643.

wash-basin (wosh'bā'sn), n. A large basin or bowl in which to wash the hands and face.

wash-basket (wosh'bās'ket), n. A circular shallow basket holding about a peck, with a bail handle, used in oystering. [Rhode Island.]

wash-bear (wosh'bār), n. [= G. waschbär.] The racoon or washing-bear. See cut under racoon.

wash-beetle (wosh'bē'tl), n. A pounder used to beat or pound clothes in the process of washing. E. H. Knight.

wash-board (wosh'bōrd), n. 1. A board or wooden frame having a ribbed or corrugated surface of sheet-metal, vulcanite, earthenware, or wood, used as a scrubber in washing clothing by hand. — 2. Naut., a broad thin plank sometimes fixed on the top of the gunwale of a boat or other small vessel's side, to prevent the sea from breaking over; also, a piece of plank on the sill of a lower deck port, for the same purpose. Also called waste-board. — 3. A board carried around the walls of a room at the bottom. Also called mopboard, skirting-board.

To stand looking out of the study-window at the rain, and kicking his foot against the wash-board in solitude.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ii. 3.

wash-boiler (wosh'boi'lēr), n. A vessel of sheet-metal in which clothes to be washed are boiled.

wash-bottle (wosh'bot'l), n. 1. In chem., a flask provided with a stopper and tubes so arranged that by blowing with the mouth the water or other liquid in the flask may be forced out in a small stream for washing chemical preparations and utensils. — 2. A bottle partly filled with water or other washing fluid through which gases are passed to purify them.

wash-bowl (wosh'bōl), n. 1. A large bowl or basin used for washing the hands, face, etc.

Emerson alone took no part in this "storm in a wash-bowl."

Quarterly Rev., CXLV. 132.

2f. A wash-tub.

Education is not form'd upon Sounds and Syllables, but upon Circumstances and Quality. So that, if he was resolv'd to have shown her thus unpolish'd, he should have made her keep Sheep, or brought her up at the Wash-Bowl. Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1693), p. 222.

wash-brew (wosh'brō), n. The dish usually known as flummery or (as in Scotland) sowens. [Prov. Eng.]

wash-cloth (wosh'klōth), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing, as in washing dishes or the person.

wash-day (wosh'dā), n. The day set apart in a household for clothes-washing.

wash-dirt (wosh'dērt), n. In placer and hydraulic mining, sand or gravel containing, or supposed to contain, gold enough to pay for washing. Also wash-stuff, wash-gravel.

washdish (wosh'dish), n. The dish-washer or wagtail. Also molly or polly washdish. See cut under wagtail. [Local, Eng.]

wash-drawing (wosh'drā'ing), n. See drawing. washed (wosh't), a. 1. That has been subjected to washing, in any sense. — 2. Of the nature of a "wash": applied on the exchanges to a mere transfer by a broker of the stock or commodity which one principal had instructed him to sell to another customer who had given instructions to purchase a similar quantity of the same stock or commodity. [Stock-exchange slang.]

Washed or fictitious sales are positively forbidden, and will render the parties concerned liable to suspension or expulsion from the Produce Exchange.

New York Produce Exchange Report, 1888-9, p. 265.

3. In zool., overlaid, as a surface or a ground-color, with a wash or light tint or color: as, a fox's black pelt washed with silver. See wash, n., 10 (d). — Washed brick. See brick.

washer (wosh'ēr), n. [wash + -er.] 1. One who or that which washes: as, a washer of clothes; a dish-washer; a wool-washer. — 2. An annular piece of leather, rubber, metal, or other material placed at a joint in a water-pipe or faucet to make the joint tight and prevent leakage, or over a bolt, or a similar piece upon which a nut may be screwed. Washers serve as cushions or packing between many parts of machines, rails, vehicles, and iron structures. When used in buildings at the ends of tie-rods, they are often of large size and diverse shapes, and are called specifically wall-washers. Some forms are used as locks, to prevent a nut from shaking loose, as in a railroad fish-plate. Such washers are made in the shape of a spring, to allow a certain amount of vibration without disturbing the nut. See lock-nut, and cuts under bolt, packing, and plus-cock.

3. A similar article forming an ornament, as at the socket or pin that holds any adjustable utensil: as, the mother-of-pearl washers of a fan. Compare rosette. — 4. In paper-manuf., a straining-and-washing machine used in the process of cleaning rags, to bring them to a pulpy condition; a beating-engine. — 5. In plumbing, the outlet of a cistern. It includes the pipe, the joint or union, and the plug, as for a basin. — 6. A washing-machine: as, a clothes-washer, window-washer, gold-washer. — 7. In coal-mining (short for coal-washer), any machine for washing coal. In the Pennsylvania anthracite region the coal is sometimes washed by jets of water, and separated from the slate, pyrites, and other refuse by jiggling. The number of machines which have been invented in different countries for washing coal is very great, but most of them are based on some form or modification of the jig of the metal-miner.

8. The wagtail, a bird. Also dish-washer, peggy dish-washer, molt-washer, molly or polly wash-dish, wagtail, nanny washtail, etc. See cut under wagtail. — 9. The wash-bear. — Beveled washer. See beveled.

washer (wosh'ēr), v. t. [washer, n.] To fit with washers.

I had worked myself up, as I always do, in the manner of heavy men; growing hot like an ill-washed wheel revolving, though I start with a cool axle.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxx.

He washed the knobs of the doors that had a rattling play whenever handled.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LV. 160.

washer-cutter (wosh'ēr-kut'ēr), n. A rotating cutting-tool with two adjustable cutters, worked by a hand-brace or by a drill, and used for cutting out annular disks for washers. E. H. Knight.

washer-gage (wosh'ēr-gāj), n. A graduated tapering rule used for measuring the diameter of bolts, nuts, and washers, and of holes, etc., to receive them.

washer-hoop (wosh'ēr-hōp), n. In a water-wheel, a gasket placed between the flange and the curb. E. H. Knight.

washerman (wosh'ēr-mān), n.; pl. washermen (-men). A man who washes clothes, etc. — Washermen's itch. Same as dobbies' itch (which see, under dobbie).

washerwoman (wosh'ēr-wūm'ān), n.; pl. washerwomen (-wūm'ēn). 1. A woman who washes clothes for others or for hire. — 2. The dish-washer or washdish, a wagtail. See cut under wagtail. — Washerwomen's itch or scall, a variety of psoriasis occurring on the hands of washerwomen.

wash-gilding (wosh'gil'ding), n. Gilding by means of an amalgam of gold from which the mercury is afterward driven off by heat. Also called mercurial gilding, and water-gilding, in allusion to the semi-liquid character of the amalgam.

wash-gravel (wosh'grav'el), n. Same as wash-dirt.

wash-hand basin (wosh'hand bā'sn), n. Same as wash-bowl.

wash-hand stand (wosh'hand stand), n. Same as wash-stand.

He . . . locked the door, piled a washhand-stand, chest of drawers, and table against it.

Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvi.

wash-house (wosh'hous), n. [ME. **waschkous*, < AS. wæsc-hus, < wæscan, wash, + hūs, house; as wash + house.] A house, generally fitted with boilers, tubs, etc., for washing clothes, etc.; a washing-house.

washiness (wosh'i-neś), n. The state of being washy, watery, or worthless; want of strength.

washing (wosh'ing), n. [wash, v. (cf. washinge, waschunge, wessinge, waschunge, < AS. wæscan, wash, verbal n. of wæscan, wash: see wash, v.] 1. The act of cleansing with water; ablution. Ceremonial washing has been practised in ancient and modern times and among various peoples. The principal ceremonial washings in the modern Christian church are two: washing of feet, in commemoration of the washing of the feet of the disciples by Christ (see foot); and washing of the hands, especially in connection with the celebration of the eucharist. In the Western Church, as well as in the Greek and other Oriental churches, the priest washes his hands before celebration. In the Western Church he also washes his fingers after the offertory and at the end of the eucharistic office. See ablution, lavabo, purification, and holy water (under water).

John wondered why the Messias, the Lamb of God, pure and without spot, who needed not the abstersions of repentance, or the washings of baptism, should demand it.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 95.

2. Clothes washed, especially those washed at one time; a wash. — 3. The result of washing; that which is washed from something else, as gold dust. — To give one's head for washing, to submit to insult.

So am I, and forty more good fellows, that will not give their heads for the washing, I take it.

Beau. and Fl., Cupid's Revenge, iv. 3.

washing-bear (wosh'ing-bār), n. The wash-bear or racoon, Procyon lotor: so called from its habit of putting its food into water before eating it, as if to wash it. See lotor, and cut under racoon.

washing-crystals (wosh'ing-kris'talz), n. pl. See sodium carbonate, under sodium.

washing-drum (wosh'ing-drum), n. In mining, same as washing-trommel.

washing-engine (wosh'ing-en'jin), n. In paper-manuf., the first of the series of rag-cutting and -cleaning machines used to reduce rags to pulp. It cleans the rags and cuts them to the size known as half-stuff, which is passed on to the beating-engine. See rag-engine. E. H. Knight.

washing-gourd (wosh'ing-gōrd), n. Same as sponge-gourd.

washing-house (wosh'ing-hous), n. A wash-house.

washing-machine (wosh'ing-mā-shēn'), n. An apparatus, operated by hand or steam-power, for washing clothing, fabrics, wool, or other material; a clothes-washer. Washing-machines for domestic and laundry use have been made in the form of churns, rubbing- or beating-machines, and tumbling-boxes. While a great variety of machines have been introduced, all depend essentially upon some mechanical device for stirring and beating the clothes in a vessel containing hot soapy water. Rubbing the clothes against a ribbed surface under water appears to be the most common method. For bleacheries and mills where large quantities of fabrics are to be washed, the material is made up into continuous bands, and is drawn through vats over rollers. In some machines beaters are used to assist in cleaning the fabrics. Such machines are of the nature of bucking-machines, keirs, winching-machines, and dash-wheels. Washing-machines are designed to be used with wringers. One form for domestic use is practically a form of wringer, the clothes being cleaned by drawing them between rollers of corrugated rubber.

washing-powder (wosh'ing-pou'dēr), n. A powdered preparation (as of soda-ash and Scotch soda) used in washing clothes.

washing-rollers (wosh'ing-rō'lērz), n. pl. Rollers for squeezing goods or yarn after scouring. They are of cast-iron, turned true and smooth. The requisite pressure is applied by means of compound levers or movable weights. E. H. Knight.

washing-shield (wosh'ing-shēld), n. In washing, a ridged or corrugated shield for the palm of the hand, or a shield at once to protect the person and supply a surface on which to rub the clothes. E. H. Knight.

Washington canvasback. Same as redhead, 2. Washington cedar. See cedar, 2, and cut under Sequoia.

Washingtonia (wosh-ing-tō'ni-ā), n. [NL. (Wendland, 1879), named after George Washington (1732-99), first President of the United States.] A genus of palms, of the tribe Corypheæ. It is characterized by bisexual flowers with slightly imbricated segments, and a three-lobed ovary with elongated filiform style. The albumen of the seed is uniform, like that of the related genera Corypha and Sabal, but the embryo, unlike the others, is sub-basilar. There is but one species clearly known, W. filifera, native of southern California and the adjacent border, called desert-palm, and locally fan-palm and San Diego palm. It produces a tall robust cylindrical trunk, enlarged at the base, often 40, sometimes 75, feet high, crowned by a cluster of light-green circular plicate leaves with from 40 to 60 folds about 4 feet across, cleft nearly to the middle into induplicate segments fringed with fine white pendu-

We did but . . . pledge you all In wassail. Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

2. A festive occasion or meeting where drinking and pledging of healths are indulged in; festivities; a drinking-bout; a carouse.

The king doth wake to-night and takes his rouse, Keeps wassail. Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 9.

3. The liquor used on such occasions; specifically, ale, mixed with a smaller amount of wine, sweetened and flavored with spices, fruit, etc.

Wassail, or rather the wassail bowl, . . . was a bowl of spiced ale formerly carried about by young women on New-year's eve. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 466.

But let no footstep heat the floor,
Nor bowl of wassail mantle warm.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cv.

4. A merry drinking-song.

Have you done your wassail? 'tis a handsome drowsy ditty, I'll assure you. Beau, and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 1. =Syn. 2. Revel, Debauch, etc. See carousal.

wassail (wos'äl), v. [Also wassell; < wassail, n.] 1. trans. To drink to the health or prosperity of: as, to wassail the apple (an old custom on Christmas eve).

Wassail the Trees, that they may beare
You many a Plum, and many a Pear;
For more or less, fruits they will bring,
As you doe give them Wassailing.
Herriek, Hesperides, Ceremonies for Christmas, iv.

The ceremony of wassailing the apple orchard on Twelfth Night is said to be obsolete.

The Academy, April 19, 1890, p. 265.

II. intrans. To drink healths; carouse.

Spending all the day, and a good part of the night, in dancing, carolling, and wassailing.

Nor could she otherwise account for the judge's quiescent mood than by supposing him craftily on the watch, while Clifford developed these symptoms of a distracted mind.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

5. A person, or number of persons, whose duty it is to watch over the persons, property, or interests of others; a watchman, or body of watchmen; a sentinel; a sentry; guard.

Such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,

And beat our watch, and rob our passengers.

Shak., Rich. II., v. 3. 8.

Home in a coach, round by the Wall, where we met so many stops by the Watches that it cost us much time and some trouble, and more money, to every Watch, to them to drink.

Pepys, Diary, III. 410.

6. The period of time during which one person or body of persons watch or stand sentinel, or the time from one relief of sentinels to another; hence, a division of the night, when the precautionary setting of a watch is most generally necessary; period of time; hour. The Jews, like the Greeks and Romans, divided the night into military watches instead of hours, each watch representing the period for which each separate body of sentinels remained on duty. The proper Jewish reckoning recognized only three such watches: the first (lasting from sunset till about 10 P. M.), the second or middle watch (10 P. M. to 2 A. M.), and the third, or morning watch (from 2 A. M. till sunrise). After the establishment of the Roman power they were increased to four, which were named as first, second, etc., or by the terms even, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning, these terminating respectively at 9 P. M., midnight, 3 A. M., and 6 A. M.

7. Naut. (a) The period of time occupied by each part of a ship's crew alternately while on duty. The period of time called a watch is four hours, the reckoning beginning at noon or midnight. Between 4 and 8 P. M. the time is divided into two short watches, or dog-watches, in order to prevent the constant recurrence of duty to the same portion of the crew during the same hours. Thus, the period from 12 to 4 P. M. is called the afternoon watch, from 4 to 6 the first dog-watch, from 6 to 8 the second dog-watch, from 8 to 12 the first night watch, from midnight to 4 A. M. the middle watch, from 4 to 8 the morning watch, and from 8 to 12 noon the forenoon watch. When this alternation of watches is kept up during the 24 hours, it is termed having watch and watch, in distinction from keeping all hands at work during one or more watches.

After 2. or 3. watches more we were in 24. fadoms.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, l. 112.

(b) A certain part of the officers and crew of a vessel who together attend to working her for an allotted time. The crew of every vessel while at sea is generally divided into two parts: the starboard watch, which in the merchant service is the captain's watch, and is often commanded by the second mate; and the port or larboard watch, which in the merchant service is commanded by the chief mate. In the British and United States navies these watches are commanded by the lieutenants successively. The anchor-watch is a small watch composed of one or two men appointed to look after the ship while at anchor or in port.

8. Anything by which the progress of time is perceived and measured. (a) A candle marked out into sections, each of which required a certain time to burn.

Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch.

Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 63.

(b) A small portable timepiece or timekeeper that may be worn on the person, operated by power stored in a coiled spring, and capable of keeping time when held in any position. Watches were invented at Nuremberg about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and for a long time the wearing of a watch was considered in some degree a mark or proof of gentility. Thus Malvolio remarks in anticipation of his great fortune:

I frown the while; and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my — some rich jewel. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 66.

The new contrivance of applying precious stones to watches I had the good fortune to see when Mr. Facio, the inventor, and an ingenious man, and Mr. Debauffe, the workman, presented their watches, to have the approbation of the Royal Society.

W. Derham (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 173).

A friend of mine had a watch given him when he was a boy, a "bull's eye," with a loose silver case that came off like an oyster-shell from its contents; you know them — the cases that you hang on your thumb, while the core, or the real watch, lies in your hand as naked as a peeled apple.

O. W. Holmes, Professor, ii.

9. pl. A name of the trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flava, probably alluding to the resemblance of the flowers to watches.—10. In pottery, a trial piece of clay so placed in a kiln that it can be readily withdrawn to enable the workmen to judge by its appearance of the heat of the fire and the condition of the ware remaining in the saggars.—11. In hawking, a company or flight, as of nightingales.—Beat of a watch. See beat.

Duplex watch, a watch having two sets of teeth upon the rim of its escapement-wheel. Officer of the watch. See watch-officer.—Paddy's watch. Same as paddyhack, 3.—Parish watch. See parish.—The Black Watch, a semi-military organization in Edinburgh, Scotland, in the early part of the eighteenth century. From this regiment of the British army was afterward formed, and the name was ultimately given to the 42d and 73d regiments, which are now the 1st and 2d Battalions of the Black Watch or Royal Highlanders.—To muster the watch. See muster.—To stand a watch. See stand.

—Watch and ward, the old custom of watching by night and by day in towns and cities. English writers up to the seventeenth century recognize a distinction between watch and ward, the former being used to signify a watching and guarding by night, and the latter a watching, guarding, and protecting by day. Hence, when the terms were used in combination, especially in the phrase to keep watch and ward, they implied a continuous and uninterrupted watching and guarding, constant vigilance and protection by night and by day.

It ys the Strongest towne of walls, towers, Bulwerks, watches and wardes that ever I saw in all my lyff.

Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 16.

I sawe at the towne of Braxima at the artillerie brought together to ye gates of your house; I saw watch and ward kept round about your lodging.

Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 246.

watch (woch), v. [ME. wacchen, wecchen, < AS. wæccan, watch, wake: see wake<sup>1</sup>, v., and cf. watch, n.] I. intrans. 1. To be awake; be or continue without sleep; keep vigil.

But if necessitie compell you to watch longer then ordinary, then be sure to augment your sleepe the next morning.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 252.

As soon as I am dead,

Come all and watch one night about my hearse.

Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, ii. 1.

2. To be attentive, circumspect, or vigilant; be closely observant; notice carefully; give heed.

Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.

Mat. xxvi. 41.

Rooks, watching doubtfully as you pass in the distance, rise into the air if you stop.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 62.

3. To act as a watchman, guard, sentinel, or the like; keep watch.

The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard.

Shak., Othello, ii. l. 219.

4. To look forward with expectation; be expectant; seek opportunity; wait.—5. To act as attendant or nurse on the sick by night; remain awake to give attendance, assistance, or the like; as, to watch with a patient in a fever.—6. To float on the surface of the water: said of a buoy.—To watch over, to be cautiously observant of; inspect; superintend and guard from error and danger; keep guard over.

Watch over thyself, counsel thyself, judge thyself impartially.

J. Taylor.

There is abundant cause to think that every town in which the Lord Jesus Christ is worshipped hath an angel to watch over it.

C. Mather, Mag. Chris., Hist. Boston.

II. trans. 1. To look with close attention at or on; keep carefully and constantly in view or supervision; keep a sharp lookout on or for; observe, notice, or regard with vigilance and care; keep an eye upon.

Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus.

Shak., M. of V., v. l. 230.

They are singled out, and all opportunities watched against them.

Bacon, Political Fables, l. Expl.

When Pitt entered Parliament, the whole political world was attentively watching the progress of an event which soon added great strength to the Opposition.

Macaulay, William Pitt.

2. To have in keeping; tend; guard; take care of.

Flaming ministers to watch and tend

Their earthy charge. Milton, P. L., ix. 156.

Lord Brampton. Charges? For what? Sable. First, Twenty Guineas to my Lady's Woman for notice of your Death (a Fee I've before now known the Widow herself go halves in), but no matter for that. In the next place, Ten Pounds for watching you all your long Fit of Sickness last Winter.

Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, ii. 1.

Paris watch'd the flocks in the groves of Ida. Broome.

3. To look for; wait for.

We will stand and watch your pleasure.

Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 249.

4. To take or detect by lying in wait; surprise.

Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now.

Shak., M. of W., v. 6. 107.

5. In falconry, to keep awake; keep from sleep, as a hawk, for the purpose of exhausting and taming it.

My lord shall never rest;

I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience.

Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 23.

watch-bell<sup>1</sup> (woch'bel), n. 1. An alarm-bell.

They [Russian travelers] report that the Land of Mugalla reaches from Boghar to the north sea, and hath many Castles built of Stone four-square, with Towers at the Corners cover'd with glazed Tiles; and on the Gates Alarm Bells, or Watch-Bells, twenty pound weight of Metal.

Milton, Hist. Moscova, iii.

2. The bell which is struck every half-hour on board ship to mark the time. Now called ship's bell.

watch-bill (woch'bil), n. A list of the officers and crew of a ship, as divided into watches, together with the several stations to which the men respectively belong.

Th' eternal watch-births of thy sacred Wit.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Magnificence.

watch-box (woch'boks), n. A sentry-box.

watch-candle (woch'kan'dl), n. Same as watching-candle.

Were it not better for a man in a fair room to set up one great light, or branching candlestick of lights, than to go about with a small watch candle into every corner?

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 45.

watchcase (woch'käs), n. 1. The outer case for a watch. Formerly it was often a hinged cover or box fitted closely over the watch proper, and having openings through which the dial appeared and the stem or ring projected. In modern watches this feature is generally absent, and the watchcase is the metal cover, usually of gold or silver, which incloses the works.

We now never see watch-cases made of other materials than the precious metals, or imitations thereof; but then [reign of Queen Anne] beautiful cases were made of shagreen of various colours, or tortoiseshell inlaid or studded with gold.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, l. 159.

2. Same as watch-pocket.—3. A sentry-box. [Rare.]

O thou dull dog [sleep], why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch

A watch-case, or a common larm-bell?

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. l. 17.

watchcase-cutter (woch'käs-kut'er), n. A machine for cutting hinge-recesses in watchcases. E. H. Knight.

watch-clock (woch'klok), n. 1. An alarm.

Powrful Need (Arts ancient Dame and Keeper,

The early watch-clock of the sloathful sleeper).

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Handy-Crafts.

watch-gun (woch'gūn), n. A gun fired at the changing of the watch, as in a fortress or garrison, or on board a man-of-war.

watch-header (woch'hed'ér), n. The officer in charge of a watch.

There are four watches known as the starboard and larboard watches, commanded respectively by the first, second and third mates, who are known as watch-headers.
Pacifics of the U. S., V. ii. 229.

watch-house (woch'hous), n. 1. A house in which a watch or guard is placed.—2. A house where night watchmen assemble previous to the hour at which they enter upon their respective beats, and where disturbers of the peace seized by them during the night are lodged and kept in custody till morning, when they are brought before a magistrate; a lockup.

At the Golden Ball and 2 Green Posts (there being a Hall with two spaces at the door), near the Watch-House, in Fleet-street, Marsh.
quoted in Addison's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 118.

watching (woch'ing), n. [Verbal n. of watch, v.] A keeping awake; a vigil.

In watch-hours often. 2 Cor. xi. 27.
Watchings of flowers. Same as rigils of flowers (which see, under rigil).

watching-candle (woch'ing-kan'dl), n. The candle used at the watching or waking of a corpse.

Why should I twine my arms to cables, sit up all night like a watching-candle, and distill my brains through my eyelids?
Academy of Compliments (1714).

watch-jewel (woch'jō'el), n. A jewel, usually a ruby, in which is drilled a hole for an arbor, used in the works of a watch, to lessen friction and wear.

watch-key (woch'ke), n. A small key with a square tube to fit the winding-arbor of a watch, serving to wind the watch by coiling the mainspring.

watch-light (woch'lit), n. A light kept burning at night, as for the use of a watcher in the sick-room.

There's a star;
Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the wall.
Browning, Andrea del Sarto.

watchmaker (woch'mā'kèr), n. One whose occupation is to make and repair watches. Watchmakers' cramp, a neurosis affecting watchmakers, in which, through irregular muscular action, it becomes impossible to hold in the eye-socket the lens with which they examine their work. Occasionally also the fingers are affected in a manner similar to what is observed in writers' cramp. Watchmakers' drill. See drill.

watchmaking (woch'mā'king), n. The art or operation of making watches; the business or occupation of a watchmaker.

watchman (woch'mān), n.; pl. watchmen (-men). [< ME. watchman; < watch + man.] A person set to keep watch; specifically, a sentinel; a guard; one who guards the streets of a city by night; also, one set to keep guard, as over a building in the night, to protect it from fire or thieves.

*They went, and made the sepulchre sure with watchmen, and sealed the stone.*
Tyndale (1526), Mat. xxvii. 66.

Watchman, what of the night? Isa. xxi. 11.
Our watchmen from the towers, with longing eyes,
Expect his swift arrival. Dryden, Spanish Friar, i. 1.
Who has not heard the Scowler's Midnight Frie?
Who has not trembled at the Mobeck's Name?
Was there a Watchman took his hourly Rounds
Safe from their blows or new invented Wounds?
Gay, Trivia, iii. 327.

Watchman's clock. See clock 2.

watch-mark (woch'mārk), n. A mark worn on the right or the left arm of a man in the naval service according as he is stationed in the starboard or the port watch.

watch-meeting (woch'mē'ting), n. A religious meeting or religious services held on the last night of the year, and terminated on the arrival of the new year. See watch-night.

watchment (woch'ment), n. [< watch + -ment.] A watching; vigil; observation. [Rare.]

My watchments are now over, by my master's direction.
Richardson, Pamela, I. 171.

watch-night (woch'nit), n. The last night of the year, on which, in some churches, religious services are held till the advent of the new year.

watch-officer (woch'of'is-ér), n. The officer in charge of the deck of a ship, who takes his turn with others in standing watches, during which time, subject to the authority of the commanding officer, he has charge of the ship. Also stand-officer, stand-officer of the watch.

watch-oil (woch'oil), n. A refined, very limpid and fluid lubricating-oil, used in oiling clocks and watches. Olive- or almond-oil after clarifying is much used for this purpose. Also clock-oil.

watch-paper (woch'pā'pér), n. A small circle of paper, silk, muslin, or other material, inserted in the outer case of an old-fashioned watch, to prevent the metal from defacing the inner case. These papers were frequently cut with elaborate designs, or painted with miniatures or ciphers and devices. Those of textile fabrics were embroidered in silk, or with human hair. Commoner ones were printed with the head of some public character, or with some motto or sentiment.

watch-peel (woch'pēl), n. A watch-tower.

Watch-peels, castles, and towers looked out upon us as we walked.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, I.

watch-pocket (woch'pok'et), n. A small pocket in a garment for carrying a watch on the person; also, a pocket, bag, etc., in or on the head-curtain of a bed for holding the watch at night.

watch-pole (woch'pōl), n. The pole or truncheon carried by a watchman.

*I know a gentleman that has several wounds in the head by watch-poles, and has been thrice run through the body to carry on a good jest.* Steele, Spectator, No. 358.

watch-rate (woch'rāt), n. A rate authorized to be levied in England for watching and lighting a parish or borough.

watchspring (woch'spring), n. The mainspring of a watch.

watch-stand (woch'stānd), n. A contrivance for holding the watch when it is not worn on the person, enabling the dial to be seen. The form is often that of a small clock-case, and the stands of the eighteenth century were frequently very rich, both in material and in workmanship.

watch-tackle (woch'tak'el), n. Naut., a small tackle consisting of a double and single block with a fall. Also called handy-billy.

*By hauling every brace and bowline, and clapping watch-tackles upon all the sheets and halyards, we managed to hold our own.* R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 250.

watch-telescope (woch'tel'e-skōp), n. See telescope.

watch-tower (woch'tou'ér), n. A tower on which a sentinel is placed to watch for enemies, for the approach of danger, etc.

*I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the day-time.* Isa. xxi. 8.

*About a mile from the town there is a very high and strong watch tower.* Corgat, Crudities, I. 10.

watchword (woch'wërd), n. [< ME. watchword; < watch + word.] 1. A word or short phrase to be communicated on challenge to the watch or sentinels in a camp; a password or signal by which friends can be known from enemies.

Watchwordes to wale, that weghis might know.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 6056.

Hence—2. Any preconceived indication or a direction eagerly watched for, as a signal for action.

*All have they eares upright, waiting when the watch-word shall come that they should all rise generally into rebellion.* Spenser, State of Ireland.

3. A word used as a motto, as expressive of a principle or rule of action; a maxim, byword, or rallying-cry.

*'Now' is the constant syllable ticking from the clock of time. 'Now' is the watchword of the wise. 'Now' is on the banner of the prudent.* Parr.

*His watchword is honour, his pay is renown.*
Scott, Rokeby, v. 20.

4. The call of a watchman or sentry as he goes his rounds.

*Since when a watchword every minute of the night goeth about the wals to testifie their vigilancy.*
Sandys, Travails, p. 10.

To set a watchword upon, to make proverbial; turn into a byword.

*S. Paule himselfe (who yet for the credite of Poets) alledged twice two Poets, . . . setteth a watch-word upon Philosophy, indeede vpon the abuse. So dooth Plato, vpon the abuse, not vpon Poetrie. Plato found fault that the Poet of his time filled the worlde with wrong opinions of the Gods.* Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

water, v. t. A form of wat 1. See wat 1.

water (wā'tér), n. [< ME. water, watre, wæter, water; < AS. water = OS. water = OHG. wæter, water = D. water = MLG. water = OHG. wazzar, MHG. wazzar, G. wasser, water; with a formative -r, akin to Icel. vatn = Sw. vatten = Dan. vand = Goth. watō (pl. watnō), in which a different formative -n appears; cf. 1. A transparent, inodorous, tasteless fluid.  $H_2O$ . Water is a powerful refractor of light and an imperfect conductor of heat and electricity; it is very slightly compressible, its absolute diminution for a pressure of one atmosphere being only about one twenty-thousandth of its bulk. Although it is colorless in small quantities, it is blue like the atmosphere when viewed in mass. It assumes a solid form, that of ice or snow, at 32° F. (0° C.); and it takes the form of vapor or steam at 212° F. (100° C.), under a pressure of 29.9 inches (more exactly, 760 millimeters) of mercury, retaining that form at all higher temperatures. Under ordinary conditions, therefore, water possesses the liquid form only at temperatures lying between 32 and 212° F. The specific gravity of water is 1 at 39.2° F. (4° C.), being the unit to which the specific gravities of all solids and liquids are referred: one cubic foot of water at 62° F. weighs about 1,000 ounces or 62.5 pounds. Water is 770 times heavier than atmospheric air at 32° F. (0° C.) and under a pressure of 760 millimeters. It has its greatest density at 39.2° F. (4° C.), and in this respect it presents a singular exception to the general law of expansion by heat. If water at 39.2° F. is cooled, it expands as it cools (fill reduced to 32°), and it solidifies; and if water at 39.2° F. is heated, it expands as the temperature increases in accordance with the general law. Considered from a chemical point of view, water is a compound substance, consisting of hydrogen and oxygen, in the proportion of 2 volumes of the former gas to 1 volume of the latter; or by weight it is composed of 2 parts of hydrogen united with 16 parts of oxygen. It exhibits in itself neither acid nor basic properties. Water enters, as a liquid, into a peculiar kind of combination with the greater number of all known substances. Of all liquids water is the most powerful and general solvent, and on this important property its use depends. Without water the processes of animal and vegetable life would come to a stand. The globe is covered on about  $\frac{3}{4}$  of its surface by the ocean water, to an average depth of very nearly 12,500 feet. (See ocean.) This water is, however, far from pure, since it holds in solution nearly  $\frac{3}{4}$  per cent. of its weight of saline matter, about three fourths of which is common salt. The ocean water is not potable, but pure water can be obtained from it by distillation, as is often done at sea—for which purpose, however, fuel and a somewhat cumbersome apparatus are required. Some towns on the South American coast have been supplied with water exclusively in this way, up to the time when works were completed for bringing it from the distant mountains. The chief source of supply for the water which falls upon the earth is the ocean, from whose surface it is raised by the heat of the sun in the form of vapor, ready to be condensed again and fall as rain or snow either on sea or land, in accordance with varying and complicated conditions of climate and topography. The precipitation of rain and snow upon different parts of the earth's surface varies greatly, both in its total amount and in its seasonal distribution. Some regions receive as much as 600 inches in a year; over other extensive areas the rainfall is so small that it is hardly possible to measure it. In some districts the rain is pretty equally distributed through the year; in others it is all, or nearly all, limited to one season, as winter or summer. These climatic conditions are matters of the utmost importance, as regards both the distribution and the welfare of the human race and of animal and vegetable life in general. The habitability and fertility of the earth depend in part on temperature and in part on the amount and character of the precipitation. In general, where there is no rainfall the region is either very sparsely or not at all inhabited, and vegetation is almost entirely wanting; of this character is a considerable part of northern Africa and central Asia: such regions are called deserts. Other regions, where there is some rainfall, but where the amount is small, are destitute of forests but support a more or less abundant growth of grasses. Such regions are, as a rule, thinly inhabited, and the population is pastoral and nomadic; of this character are large areas in central Asia, and in both North and South America. Regions of abundant or even of moderately large precipitation are generally forested, and can be successfully cultivated after the forests have been cut down: these, in general, are the densely inhabited parts of the world. Such are the essential facts and conditions of the distribution of population as connected with rainfall. But to these are many exceptions. Thus, the Nile flows for 2,000 miles through a rainless region, but has a somewhat dense population for a considerable distance along its banks, though only there, the river itself being the sole source of water-supply for the inhabitants of the valley. Some regions of very small rainfall are situated sufficiently near high mountain-ranges on which the precipitation is comparatively large, and from which water can be obtained in considerable quantity with a moderate expenditure of money. In this connection the fact that the precipitation at high altitudes is chiefly in the form of snow is a matter of great importance, as thereby the supply of water is made capable of lasting through, or nearly through, the summer, the snow melting gradually, while the precipitation in the form of rain would be carried away much more rapidly. Rain, if caught at a distance from human habitations and after it has been falling for some time, contains hardly a perceptible trace of foreign matter. Snow falling in the polar regions is also very nearly chemically pure. By distillation, with suitable precautions, water may be obtained which will leave no trace of residue when evaporated in a platinum vessel, and which will also be free from gaseous contents. The water of springs and rivers always contains more or less mineral matter, which it has dissolved out from the soil and rock with which it has been in contact upon the surface or underground. Next to rain-water, the purest natural water is that of mountain-lakes fed from melting snow, and resting on crystalline and impermeable rocks; and rivers in uninhabited regions, running over similar rocks, are also very nearly pure, sometimes leaving not more than two or three grains to the gallon of foreign matter when evaporated to dryness. Rivers, on the other hand, which run over calcareous and soft shaly and clayey rocks always contain a considerable amount of impurities; from fifteen to twenty grains to the gallon is not an uncommon amount under such conditions. Pure water, such as that of mountain-lakes and rivers running over crystalline rocks, is called soft; water containing more than eight or ten grains to the gallon of mineral matter is called hard.

The foreign matter in soft water is partly organic and partly mineral; in the latter a little silica is always present, as well as salts of potash, soda, lime, and magnesia. The impurities of hard water are varied in character, but carbonate of lime generally predominates. The mineral impurities of water are not necessarily deleterious to health, even if present in somewhat large quantities. The contamination of water by organic matter (such as sewage, and the like) is a matter of great importance and often of great danger. Dead organic matter is rapidly oxidized by exposure to the air in flowing water, and ceases to be dangerous to health. The living organisms with which water is sometimes contaminated, in receiving the sewage of towns or in other ways, are sometimes the germs of deadly disease, and appear to possess a large amount of vitality, so that they can be conveyed for long distances without becoming disorganized, as is the case with dead organic matter. See water-supply.

4. A distilled liquor, essence, extract, or the like. See strongy water, under strongy.

But this water
Hath a strange virtue in 't, beyond his art;
It is a sacred relic, part of that Most powerful juice with which Medea made Old Æson young.
Massinger, Bashful Lover, v. 1.

His wife afterwards did take me into my closet, and give me a cellar of waters of her own distilling.
Pepys, Diary, April 1, 1668.

5. In phar., a solution of a volatile oil, or of a volatile substance like ammonia or camphor, in water.—6. Transparency, as of water; the property of a precious stone in which its beauty chiefly consists, involving also its refracting power. In this sense the word is applied especially to diamonds, and is used loosely to express their relative excellence: as, a diamond of the first water: hence used figuratively to note the degree of excellence or fineness of any object of esteem: as, genius of the purest water. See the phrase first water, below.

An excellent lapidary set these stones, sure;
Do you mark their waters?
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 2.

7. The waterside; the shore of a sea, lake, stream, or the like, considered with or apart from its inhabitants; specifically, a watering-place; a seaside resort. [Provincial.]

Gar warn the water, braid and wide.
Jamie Telfer (Child's Ballads, VI. 110).

The water, in the mountainous districts of Scotland, is often used to express the banks of the river, which are the only inhabitable parts of the country. To raise the water, therefore, was to alarm those who lived along its side.
Quoted in Child's Ballads, VI. 110, note.

The phrase "going to the waters" has been familiar to me for the last forty years as used by the peasantry in the counties of Huntingdon, Rutland, and Lincoln. By it is meant a seaside place, and not an inland watering-place, such as Malvern, Bath, Llanymonog, or Cheltenham.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 378.

8. In finance, additional shares created by watering stock. See water, v. t., 4.

By the much-abused word "property" he referred, of course, to the fictitious capital, or "water," which the gas companies had added to their real capital.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 92.

Above water, afloat; hence, figuratively, out of embarrassment or trouble.

Being ask'd by some that were not ignorant in Sea Affairs how long he thought the Ship might be kept above Water, he said he could promise nothing, but that it could not be done above three Hours.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 277.

Aërated waters. See airate.—Aix-la-Chapelle water, a mineral water obtained from various thermal springs at Aix-la-Chapelle in Rhenish Prussia, containing a large proportion of common salt, also other sodium salts and sulphur.—Aix-les-Bains water, from thermal springs of the same name in Savoy, contains chiefly sulphates and carbonates of sodium, magnesium, and calcium in small proportion, employed in the form of systematic bathing in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, skin-diseases, etc.—Alien water. See alien.—Apollinaris water, an agreeable sparkling water from Rhenish Prussia, containing a very minute proportion of mineral ingredients, used as a table-water.—Bag of waters, in obstet., the bulging fetal membranes, filled with liquor amni, which act as a hydraulic wedge to dilate the mouth of the womb.—Ballston Spa waters, from Ballston, New York, effervescent waters, containing a large amount of common salt with carbonates of calcium and magnesium. They possess tonic and cathartic properties.—Baryta-water. See baryta.—Basic water. See basic.

—Benediction of the waters, in the Gr. Ch., the solemn public ceremony of blessing the water in the phiale, the running waters, and the sea, observed annually with a procession and other rites on the feast of the Epiphany. See holy water, below.—Bethesda water, from Waukesha, Wisconsin, an effervescent water, containing but a small proportion of mineral ingredients: used chiefly in the treatment of urinary disorders and as a table-water.—Between wind and water. See wind.—Bitter water, a purgative mineral water having a bitter taste owing to the presence of a large amount of sulphate of magnesium, or Epsom salts. Friedrichshall water is an example of a bitter water.—Black water. Same as pyrosis.—Blue Lick water, a strong sulphur water, containing also a large amount of salt, obtained from the Blue Lick Springs, Kentucky. It possesses cathartic properties, and is used largely in the treatment of catarrhal troubles of the respiratory, digestive, and urinary tracts.—Broken water. See broken.—Buffalo lithia water, an alkaline sulphur water, containing some lithia, from Mecklenburg county, Virginia. It is diuretic and slightly laxative, and is employed in the treatment of lithemia, Bright's disease, and certain forms of dyspepsia.—Burning water, alcohol. Compare fire-water.

Take the beste wyyn that ge may fynde. . . . But firste ge muste distille this wyyn . . . tynes, and thanne haue ge good brennyng water.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 4.

Canterbury water, water tinctured with the blood of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered in 1170, and afterward canonized as a saint and martyr. See the quotation.

To satisfy these cravings, so as to hinder an uneasy feeling at the thought of tasting human blood, a tiny drop was mingled with a chalice-full of water, and in this manner given to those who begged a sip. This was the famed "Canterbury-water." Never had such a thing as drinking a martyr's blood been done before; never has it been done since. Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. i. 424.

Carbonated water, water charged with carbonic-acid gas: either natural spring-water like seltzer and apollinaris, or distilled water artificially charged with the gas.—Carlsbad water, an alkaline sulphated water, heavily charged with carbonic acid, from various thermal springs in Carlsbad, Bohemia: employed extensively in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, urinary disorders, chronic diseases of the eye and ear, intestinal catarrh, and chronic constipation.—Chow-chow water. See chow-chow.—Clysmic water, an agreeable sparkling table-water, containing chiefly calcium bicarbonate, from Waukesha, Wisconsin. It is used also as a diuretic in bladder troubles.—Cologne water. Same as cologne.—Crab Orchard water, a cathartic water, containing a rather large proportion of magnesium sulphate and a smaller amount of some other sulphates and carbonates, obtained from springs of the same name in Kentucky.—Deep water or waters, water too deep for comfort or safety; hence, figuratively, embarrassment, trial, or distress.

Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.
Ps. lxxix. 14.

Once he had been very nearly in deep water because Mrs. Froudie had taken it in dudgion that a certain young rector, who had been left a widower, had a very pretty governess for his children.
Trollope.

False waters, in obstet., a fluid which occasionally collects between the amnion and the chorion.—First water, the highest degree of fineness in a diamond or other precious stone; hence, figuratively, the highest rank morally,

Low-water alarm

Low-water mark, the mark on the shore, or in the sea, showing the low-water level. See low-water mark.

Low-water slack, the time of slack water at the lowest

Marinebad water, a mineral water from the spa of this name in Bohemia, not far from Karlsbad. It is a weak, slightly acid, and is of high living, and also for chronic bronchitis, neuralgia, and cystitis. — Meteorite waters, mineral waters, north water. See the adjective. — Oil on troubled waters, figuratively, any oil that is poured on a troubled situation.

Orange-flower water. See orange-flower water. — Oxygenated water. See oxygenated water. — Persicott-water. See persicott-water. — Plot's water. See plot's water.

Poland Spring water, a very weak mineral constituent, obtained from Poland Spring, Maine. It is employed chiefly as a table-water and as a diuretic in the treatment of chronic disorders of the urinary tract. — Potash-water. See potash-water. — Public, quick, quicksilver water. See public, quick, quicksilver water.

Red water, bloody urine; hematuria. — Richfield Springs water, a sulphur water from the village of the same name in New York State, used largely in the treatment of rheumatism, skin-diseases, and chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract. — Rockbridge Alum Springs water, a tonic water, with astringent taste, obtained in the place of the same name in Virginia. It is employed in the treatment of skin-diseases and catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary tracts. — Rosemary water. Same as rosemary water.

Rubinst-Condal water. Same as Rubinst-Condal water. — Saratoga waters, various mineral waters, obtained from Saratoga Springs, New York. They are used in the treatment of certain chronic skin-diseases, constipation, indigestion, and liver disorders, and in catarrhal conditions of the urinary and digestive tracts. Among the best-known of the springs are the Congress, Hathorn, High Rock, Geyser, Pavilion, Seltzer, and Vichy. — Sedative water. See sedative water. — Selters water, a highly prized mineral water found at Nieder-Selters village in the province of Hesse-Nassau in Prussia. It contains a considerable quantity of sodium chloride (common salt), and much smaller quantities of sodium, calcium, and magnesium carbonates. Also called Seltzer water.

Sharon Springs water, a sulphur water from Sharon Springs, New York. It is largely used in the treatment of diseases of the skin, chronic catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and digestive tract, gout, and rheumatism. — Silicious, slack, strong water. See the adjective. — Soden water, saline chalybeate water from Soden in Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used chiefly in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract and in the early stages of pulmonary consumption. — Soft water. See soft water. — Sweet water. (a) Fresh as opposed to salt water. See sweet water. (b) Glycerin. See sweet water. — Thermal waters. See thermal waters. — To be in hot water. See to be in hot water. — To break water. (a) To appear upon the surface of the water to blow, as a whale making its rising. (b) To float to the surface, as any sunken object. — To cast oil on troubled waters. See to cast oil on troubled waters. — To cast (a person's) water. See to cast (a person's) water. — To cast water into the Thames, to perform unnecessary or useless labor (possibly involving a play on the word Thames, suggesting temse, a slave).

Water, a fluid filling the space between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth of the ear; the perilymph, technically called liquor Cochlearis. — Water of crystallization. See water of crystallization. — Water of jealousy (literally, 'water of bitterness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water for drunkards directed in Num. x. 11-31 by a woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness, the act of drinking it serving as a test of innocence or guilt. — Water of life. (a) A liquid giving life or immortality to the drinker; specifically, in Biblical use, spiritual refreshment, strength, or salvation. (b) Whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic liquor; a translation of the Irish and Gaelic name of whisky, and of the French name of brandy (eau-de-vie). Compare agua vitae.

Water of Ayr stone. See water of Ayr stone. — Water of Cotunnus, a fluid filling the space between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth of the ear; the perilymph, technically called liquor Cochlearis. — Water of crystallization. See water of crystallization. — Water of jealousy (literally, 'water of bitterness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water for drunkards directed in Num. x. 11-31 by a woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness, the act of drinking it serving as a test of innocence or guilt. — Water of life. (a) A liquid giving life or immortality to the drinker; specifically, in Biblical use, spiritual refreshment, strength, or salvation. (b) Whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic liquor; a translation of the Irish and Gaelic name of whisky, and of the French name of brandy (eau-de-vie). Compare agua vitae.

Water of purification. See water of purification. — Water of separation (literally, 'water of uncleanness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer burned with cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet, used to sprinkle upon unclean persons (Num. xix.). — Water on the brain. See water on the brain. — Water-steam thermometer. See water-steam thermometer. — Water venom-globulin, a poisonous principle extracted from serpent-venom. — White Sulphur Springs water, a strong sulphur water from the springs of the same name in Greenbrier county, Virginia. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary systems, constipation, and various skin-diseases. — White water. (a) Shoal water near the shore; breakers. (b) The foaming water in rapids or swiftly flowing shallows.

White water, the continuous white water of the upper rapids raging round the curve of a steep red bank. — Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 631.

(c) Foam churned up by a whale. — Wiesbaden water, a saline water obtained from numerous thermal springs in Wiesbaden, Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used in the treatment of skin-diseases, gout, rheumatism, and neuralgia. — Wildungen water, a mineral water, containing carbonates of calcium and magnesium and a small percentage of sulphates, from Nieder-Wildungen in Waldeck. It is employed chiefly in the treatment of diseases of the urinary tract. — Yellow Sulphur Springs water, a mineral water from springs of the same name in Virginia. It contains a large proportion of lime salts and sulphates, and is cathartic. (See also barley-water, fire-water, lead-water, rice-water.)

water (wá'tér), v. [ME. wateren, wateren, waten, watten, wattron, wettron. < AS. wætrian, water, = D. wateren, water, make water, = MHG. wezern, G. wässern, irrigate, water (cf. Icel. ratna = Sw. ratna = Dan. vande, water); from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To put water into or upon; moisten, dilute, sprinkle, or soak with water; specifically, to irrigate.

All the grounds throughout the land of Egypt is continually watered by the water which upon ye 25 day of August is turned into the countries round about. — E. Webbe, Travels (ed. Arber), p. 22.

Set fruit-trees round, nor e'er indulge thy sloth, But water them, and urge their shady growth. — Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. To supply with water for drinking; feed with water: said of animals.

Aft times hae I water'd my steed Wi' the water o' Wearie's well. — The Water o' Wearie's Well (Child's Ballads, I. 199).

If the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pond, the custom is not destroyed though they do not use it for ten years. — Blackstone, Com., I. Int., iii.

3. To produce by moistening and pressure upon (silk, or other fabric) a sort of pattern on which there is a changeable play of light. See watered silk, under watered.

These things [silk and cotton goods] are watered, which very much adds to their beauty; they are made also at Aleppo, but not in so great perfection. — Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 125.

4. To increase (the nominal capital of a corporation) by the issue of new shares without a corresponding increase of actual capital. Justification for such a transaction is usually sought by claiming that the property and franchises have increased in value, so that an increase of stock is necessary in order fairly to represent existing capital. [Commercial slang.]

The stock of some of the railways has been watered to an alarming extent by the issue of fictitious capital, existing only on paper, though ranking equally for dividend — when money for this is forthcoming. Usually, the paper stock has been sold to unwary purchasers. — Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 857.

To water one's plants, to shed tears. [Old slang.]

Neither water thou thy plants, in that thou departest from thy pigges nic, neither stand in a mammering whether it bee best to depart or not. — Emphases to Philautus, M. 4. (Nares.)

II. intrans. 1. To give out, emit, discharge, or secrete water.

If they suffer the dusts of bribes to be thrown into their sight, their eyes will water and twinkle, and fall at last to blind connivance. — Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 147.

Water-check valve, in a steam engine, an automatic valve which allows the water supply delivered by the boiler to the cylinder, but prevents the water from flowing back. See water-check valve. — Water, a fluid filling the space between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth of the ear; the perilymph, technically called liquor Cochlearis. — Water of crystallization. See water of crystallization. — Water of jealousy (literally, 'water of bitterness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water for drunkards directed in Num. x. 11-31 by a woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness, the act of drinking it serving as a test of innocence or guilt. — Water of life. (a) A liquid giving life or immortality to the drinker; specifically, in Biblical use, spiritual refreshment, strength, or salvation. (b) Whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic liquor; a translation of the Irish and Gaelic name of whisky, and of the French name of brandy (eau-de-vie). Compare agua vitae.

Water-damaged, same as water-damaged. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble.

Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble.

Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble.

Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble. — Water in one's shoes, a source of trouble.

His eyes would have watered with a true feeling over the sale of a widow's furniture.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 12.

2. To gather saliva as a symptom of appetite; said of the mouth or teeth, and in figurative use noting vehement desire or craving.

In their minds they conceived a hope of a dainty banquet, and, espying their enemies a farre off, began to swallow their spittle as their mouths watered for greediness of their prey.

Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. [Arber, p. 181].)

Oh, my little green gooseberry, my teeth waters at ye!

Farquhar, Love and a Bottle, v. 1.

The dog's mouth waters only at the sight of food, but the gourmand's mouth will also water at the thought of it.

J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 57.

3. To get or take in water: as, the ship put into port to water; specifically, to drink water.

We watered at the Canaries, we traded with the Salvages at Dominica. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 150.

Were I a poet, by Hippocrène I swear (which was a certain well where all the Muses watered), etc.

Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

A Mischance befel the Horse, which lamed him as he went a watering to the Seine.

Howell, Letters, I. i. 17.

water-adder (wă'tēr-ad'ēr), n. An aquatic serpent like, or mistaken for, an adder. (a) The water-moccasin, a venomous snake. See moccasin (with cut). [U. S.] (b) The commonest water-snake of the United States. Tropidonotus (often Nerodia) sipedon.

This is a large, stout serpent, roughened with keeled scales, and somewhat spotted or blotched, like an adder, especially when young. It bites quite hard in self-defense when attacked, but is not poisonous. [U. S.]

waterage (wă'tēr-aj), n. [< water + -age]. Money paid for transportation by water.

water-agrimony (wă'tēr-ag'ri-mō-ni), n. An old name of the bur-marigold, Bidens tripartita or B. cernua.

water-aloe (wă'tēr-al'ō), n. Same as water-soldier.

water-analysis (wă'tēr-a-nal'i-sis), n. In chem., the analysis of waters, either to determine their potable quality, or fitness for use in boilers or otherwise in the arts.

water-anchor (wă'tēr-ang'kōr), n. A sail distended by spars and thrown overboard to hold a vessel's head to the wind and retard her drifting; a drag-anchor. Also called sea-anchor.

water-antelope (wă'tēr-an'tē-lōp), n. One of numerous different African antelopes, as of the genera Eleotragus, Kobus, and some others, which frequent marshy or reedy places; a reed-buck; a water-buck. See cuts under nagor and sing-sing.

water-apple (wă'tēr-ap'l), n. The custard-apple. Anona reticulata.

water-arum (wă'tēr-ā'rūm), n. See Calla, 1.

water-ash (wă'tēr-ash), n. 1. A small tree, Fraxinus platycarpa, without special value, found in deep river-swamps from Virginia to Texas and in the West Indies.—2. The black hoop- or ground-ash, Fraxinus sambucifolia, of wet grounds in the eastern half of North America. Its tough pliable dark-brown wood is largely used for interior finish and cabinet-work, for making hoops and baskets, etc.

water-avens (wă'tēr-av'enz), n. A plant, Geum rivale, found in wet meadows northward in both hemispheres. It grows some 2 feet high, and is noticeable for its nodding flowers (large for the genus), with purplish-orange petals, and, in fruit, for its feathery styles and persistent purple calyx. Also purple avens.

water-back (wă'tēr-bak), n. 1. An iron chamber or reservoir or a combination of pipes, at the back of a cooking-range or other fireplace, to utilize the heat of the fire in providing a supply of hot water.—2. In brewing, a cistern which holds the water used for mashing.

water-bag (wă'tēr-bag), n. 1. The reticulum of the stomach of the camel and other Camelidae, corresponding to the honeycomb tripe of ordinary ruminants.—2. In her., a bearing representing a vessel for holding water, usually drawn as if a leather bucket. It differs from water-bouget, or bouget, in retaining the form of the actual vessel.

water-bailage (wă'tēr-bā'lāj), n. Bailage upon goods transported by water. See bailage.

Water-baylage, a tax demanded upon all goods by the City, imported and exported.

Pepys, Diary, Jan. 20, 1668-9. (Davies.)

water-bailiff (wă'tēr-bā'lif), n. 1. A custom-house officer in a port town whose duty is to search ships.

Out of patience with the whole tribe of custom-house extortioners, boatmen, tide-waiters, and water-bailiffs, that beset me on all sides, worse than a swarm of musketoes, I proceeded a little too roughly to brush them away with my rattan.

Cumberland, West Indian, i. 5.

2. A former officer of the London corporation who saw to the observance of the statutes and by-laws applicable to the river Thames.—3. See water-bailiff, under bailiff.

water-balance (wă'tēr-bal'ans), n. An old form of water-raising apparatus, consisting of a series of troughs one above another, supported in a hanging frame, and oscillating like a pendulum. As the frame swings, the water dipped by the lowest trough runs into that next above, and in the return motion it is emptied in turn from that into the next above again, and so on. E. H. Knight.

water-bar (wă'tēr-bār), n. A ridge crossing a hill or mountain road, and leading aside water flowing down the road.

They . . . were descending, with careful reining in and bearing back, the steep, long plunges—for these mountain roads are like cataract beds, and travellers are like the falling water—where the only break and safety were the water-bars, humping up across the way at frequent intervals.

Mrs. Whitney, Odd or Even? xiii.

water-barometer (wă'tēr-ba-rom'e-tēr), n. A barometer in which water is substituted for mercury. See barometer.

If a long pipe, closed at one end only, were emptied of air, filled with water, the open end kept in water, and the pipe held upright, the water would rise in it nearly twenty-eight feet. In this way water barometers have been made.

water-barrel (wă'tēr-bar'el), n. 1. A water-cask.—2. In mining, a large wrought-iron barrel with a self-acting valve in the bottom, used in drawing water where there are no pumps. [South Staffordshire, Eng.]

water-barrow (wă'tēr-bar'ō), n. A two-wheeled barrow carrying a tank, often swung on trunnions, used by gardeners and others; a water-barrel. E. H. Knight.

water-basil (wă'tēr-baz'il), n. In gem-cutting, a uniform bevel cut around the top of a stone, after the grinding of the upper flat table.

water-bath (wă'tēr-bāth), n. 1. A bath composed of water, in contradistinction to a vapor-bath.—2. In chem., a vessel containing water which is heated to a certain temperature, over which chemical preparations or solutions are placed in suitable vessels to be digested, evaporated, or dried at the given temperature.—3. Same as bain-marie.

Water-baths. Various forms. A, B, C, with adjustable rings, for use in chem. to keep vessels at different sizes. B and C are arranged to have a constant water supply.

water-battery (wă'tēr-bat'ēr-i), n. 1. In elect. See battery.—2. In fort., a battery nearly on a level with the water.

water-beadlet (wă'tēr-bē'dl), n. A water-bailiff (f).

In the year 1700 one S. Smith, who is described as water-beadle, of St. Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey, left a legacy to his nephew, Matthew Smith, of this parish.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 487.

water-bean (wă'tēr-bēn), n. A plant of the genus Nelumbo.

water-bear (wă'tēr-bār), n. A bear-animalcule. See Macrobiotidae, Arctisca, and Tardigrada.

water-bearer (wă'tēr-bār'ēr), n. [< ME. watyr beare = Sw. vattenbärare = Dan. vandbarer; < water + bearer]. 1. One who carries water; specifically, one whose business is the conveying of water from a spring, well, river, etc., to purchasers or consumers.

If there be neuer a wyse man, make a water-bearer, a tinker, a cobbler, . . . controller of the mynte.

Latimer, Sermon on the Plough.

2. [cap.] In astron., a sign of the zodiac. See Aquarius.

water-bearing (wă'tēr-bār'ing), n. A journal-box having in the lower part a groove communicating with a pipe through which water under heavy pressure is admitted beneath the journal, which it raises slightly from its bearings. As the journal revolves, the water flows in an exceedingly thin film or sheet between it and the bearings, forming a very efficient lubricant. See cut in next column. Also called patin-glisant and hydraulic pivot.

water-bed (wă'tēr-bed), n. A large india-rubber mattress filled with water, on which a very sick person, or one who is bedridden, is sometimes placed, to avoid the production of bed-sores. Also called hydrostatic bed.

water-beech (wă'tēr-bēch), n. 1. A small tree, the American hornbeam, Carpinus Caroliniana: so named from its growing in wet ground, and a, wheel; b, pipe; c, d, bearings for the shaft; e, e, hollow supports for bearings; f, f, pipe and valves through which water is forced into the hollow supports; g, slot through which the water passes into the bearings with sufficient force to support completely the weight of a and the shaft.

from its resemblance, especially in its bark, to the beech. Also called blue-beech.—2. Improperly, the sycamore, or American plane-tree, Platanus occidentalis, growing on low grounds, and having reddish wood like that of the beech.

water-beetle (wă'tēr-bē'tl), n. A beetle which lives in the water. Such beetles belong mainly to the families Amphizoidæ, Hydrophilæ, Dytiscidæ, and Gyrinidæ of the adephagous series, and the Hydrophilidæ of the clavicorn series. The first four are sometimes grouped under the name Hydradeptæ, as distinguished from the Geadephaga, or ground-beetles and tiger-beetles. A few other beetles are to some extent aquatic; but the term is restricted to the species of the five families named. See these family names, and cuts under Dytiscus, Gyrinidæ, Hydrobius, Hydrophilidæ, and Hybius. Compare water-bug.

water-bellows (wă'tēr-bel'ōz), n. A form of blower used in gas-machines, and formerly to supply a blast for furnaces. It consists essentially of an inverted vessel suspended in water, on raising which in the water air is drawn in through an inlet valve, while on lowering the vessel the air is forced out again through another valve. Such vessels are usually placed in pairs, and are lowered and raised alternately. The device is also used for supplying air to the pipes of a pneumatic clock-system. The central clock lifts the inverted tank, and, letting it fall once a minute, sends a puff of air through the pipes, and thus moves all the hands of the clocks connected with the system.

water-bells (wă'tēr-belz), n. The European white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphaea alba). Britten and Holland. [North. Eng.]

water-bird (wă'tēr-bērd), n. In ornith., an aquatic as distinguished from a terrestrial or aerial bird; in the plural, the gallatorial and natatorial or wading and swimming birds, collectively distinguished from land-birds. The term reflects an obsolete classification in which birds were divided into three main groups, called Aves areæ, Aves terrestres, and Aves aquaticæ. These divisions are abolished, but the English names of two of them, land-bird and water-bird, continue in current use because of their convenience. Compare water-fowl, 2.

water-biscuit (wă'tēr-bis'kit), n. A biscuit or cracker made of flour and water.

water-blackbird (wă'tēr-blak'bērd), n. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. See Cinclus and dipper, 5. [Ireland and Scotland.]

water-blast (wă'tēr-blāst), n. In mining, a method of ventilation, in which an apparatus is employed which is the same in principle as the trompe of the Catalan forge. See trompe, 2.

It [the water-blast] is not much employed nowadays, and gives only a low useful effect.

Callon, Lectures on Mining (trans.), II. 441.

water-blebs (wă'tēr-blebz), n. Pemphigus.

water-blink (wă'tēr-blingk), n. A spot of cloud hanging in arctic regions over open water, the presence of which it serves to indicate.

The water-blink consists of dark clouds or spots on the horizon, and is formed by the ascending mists which gather in clouds and hang over pools of water. It is always the herald of advance, and is eagerly looked for.

water-blinks (wă'tēr-blings), n. Same as blinking-chickweed.

water-blob (wă'tēr-blob), n. A local name of the marsh-marigold, Caltha palustris, of the white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphaea alba), and of the yellow water-lily, Nymphaea (Nuphar) lutea. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-blue (wă'tēr-blō), n. A coal-tar color used in dyeing, and similar to soluble blue. It is principally used for dyeing cotton.

water-board (wă'tēr-bōrd), n. A board set up on the edge of a boat to keep off spray, etc.

water-boat (wă'tēr-bōt), n. A boat carrying water in bulk for the supply of ships.

water-boatman (wă'tēr-bōt'man), n. 1. The boat-fly or boat-insect, an aquatic bug of the water-cavy (wá'tér-ká'vi), n. The capibara.

water-celery (wá'tér-sel'e-ri), n. 1. The cursed crowfoot, Ranunculus sceleratus, of temperate Europe, Asia, and North America. It has a thick hollow stem a foot or two high, the lower leaves stalked and three-lobed, the petals small, and the carpels very numerous. The juice is very acid, and is used by beggars to produce sores, but the plant is in some places eaten after boiling.
 2. See Valisneria.

water-cell (wà'tèr-sel), n. 1. One of several diverticula of the paunch of the camel, serving to store up water. See water-bag, 1.

These, the so-called water-cells, serve to strain off from the contents of the paunch, and to retain in store, a considerable quantity of water. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 328.

2. A voltaic cell in which the liquid is pure water.

water-centiped (wâ'tér-sen'ti-ped), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler.
[U. S.]

water-charger (wâ'têr-châr'jêr), n. A device for filling the water-passages of a pump, so that it may act promptly when started.

water-chat (wá'tér-chat), n. 1. A bird of the family Henicuridae.—2. A South American tyrant-flycatcher of the subfamily Fluricolinæ, of which there are many genera and species; a water-cap. See cut under Fluricola.

water-check (wá'tér-chek), n. A check-valve for regulating a supply of water, as in the Gifford injector. E. H. Knight.

water-chestnut (wâ'têr'-ches'nut), n. See Trapa.

water-chevrotain (wâ'tèr-shev<sup>n</sup>ro-tân), n. An aquatic African traguline, Hyomochus aquaticus, belonging to the family Tragulidae, and thus related to the kanchil and napu.

water-chicken (wâ'têr-chik'en), n. The common gallinule, Gallinula galeata. Ralph and Baqg, 1886. [Oneida county, New York.]

water-chickweed (wă'tēr-chik'wéd), n. 1. A small, smooth, and green tufted herb, Montia fontana, found throughout Europe, in northern Asia, from arctic America down the west coast to California, and in the Andes to their southern extremity. Also blinking-chickweed (which see). — 2. A name for Callitriche verna and Stellaria (Malachium) aquatica.

water-chinkapin (wá'têr-ching<sup>u</sup> 'ka-pín, n.) The American nelmumbo, Nelumbo lutea, or primarily its edible nut-like seed; so named from the resemblance of the seeds to chinkapins. They are borne immersed in pits in the large top-shaped receptacle. Also wankapin, yoncopin.

water-cicada (wâ'tèr-si-kā'dü), n. A water-boatman.

water-clam (wâ'tér-klam), n. A bivalve of the family Spondylidae; a thorn-oyster. See cut under Spondylus.

water-clock (wă'tér-klok), n. A clepsydra.
A clepsydra, or waterclock, which played upon flutes the hours of the night at a time when they could not be seen on the index. Dr. Burney, Hist. Music, I. 512.

water-closet (wâ'tér-kloz'et), n. A privy having some contrivance for carrying off the discharges through a waste-pipe below by the agency of water.

water-cock (wâ'tér-kok), n. The kora, Gallinula cristata, a large dark gallinule of India, Ceylon, Java, and islands eastward, horned with a red caruncle on top of the head.

water-colly (wâ'tér-kol'i), n. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Prov. Eng.]

water-color (wá'tér-kul'ŏr), n. 1. Painting, especially artistic painting, with pigments for which water and not oil is used as a solvent.—2. A pigment adapted or prepared for painting in this method.

Some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents; . . .
And never yet did insurrection want Such water colours to impaint his cause.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 80.

Water-colours are sold in four forms, in cakes, pastilles, pans, and tubes. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, xxii.

3. A painting executed by this method, or with pigments of this kind.

The Art Galleries opened every year, and, besides the National Gallery, there were the Society of British Artists, the Exhibition of Water Colours, and the British Institution in Pall Mall. W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 135.

Also used attributively in all senses.
water-colored (wâ'têr-kul'ord). a. Of the

The other [sort of cherry], which hangs on the branch like grapes, is water colored within, of a faintish sweet, and greedily devoured by the small birds.

Beverly, Virginia, iv, ¶ 12.

water-cat (wá'tér-kat), n. The nair, or Oriental otter, Lutra nair, translating a Mahratta name.

water-coloring (wá'tér-kul'or-ing), n. The use of water-colors, or work executed in water-colors or pigments of similar nature. [Trade use.]

The Dutch and rose pinks are sometimes used, but they cannot be relied upon in water-coloring.

Paperhanger, p. 76.

water-colorist (wá'tér-kul'or-ist), n. One who paints in water-colors.

water-comparator (wá'tér-kom'pá-rá-tor), n. An apparatus for comparing thermometers with a standard, consisting essentially of a reservoir containing water, with means for obtaining different temperatures and for maintaining the whole mass at the same temperature during a series of observations.

water-cooler (wá'tér-kó'lér), n. Any device for cooling water; especially, a vessel with non-conducting walls in which water for drinking is placed with ice. Such coolers are fitted with a faucet in the lower part, for drawing off the water. The effect of other coolers is due to evaporation through their porous walls. See idra, 3.

Water cooler or, water shell; A, non-conducting filling; C, inner shell water-core (wá'tér-kór), n. 1. In foundling, a hollow core placed inside the mold, within which a current of cold water can be made to pass to absorb the heat and hasten the cooling of the casting; used especially to cool the bore of cast guns.—2. In some forms of car-axle, a quantity of water in a hermetically closed cavity, intended to take up heat from the journals.—3. A blemish, common in some varieties of the apple, in which the flesh about the core assumes a watery, translucent appearance.

watercourse (wá'tér-kórs), n. 1. A stream of water; a river or brook.

The woods climb up boldly along the hillsides, overshadowing every little dingle and watercourse.

Gekke, Geol. Sketches, iii.

2. A channel or canal made for the conveyance of water, or serving for conveyance by water.

Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters.

Job xxxviii. 25.

Scouring the water-courses through the cities; A fine periphrasis of a kennel-raker.

Fletcher (and another ?), Prophetess, iii. 1.

3. In law, a stream of water, usually flowing in a definite channel having a bed and sides or banks, and usually discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. Bigelow. The condition of being occasionally dry does not deprive it of the character of a watercourse; but occasional flows of water caused by unusual rains, or melting of snow, and following a channel which is usually dry, do not constitute a watercourse. The owner of a watercourse has, within certain limits, a right to have it flow substantially unimpaired by the owners above and below. A grant of a watercourse may mean a grant of (1) the easement or the right to the running of water; (2) the channel which contains the water, the pipe, or drain; or (3) the land over which the water flows. George Jessel, Master of the Rolls.

water-cow (wá'tér-kou), n. The common domestic Indian buffalo, Bos bubalus or Bubalus bubalus; the water-buffalo; so called by English residents in translating a Chinese name, from the habit it has of seeking the water to escape the annoyance of insects. It is not a distinct species. The same habit is strongly marked in the African or Cape buffalo, B. capra, and may be observed of domestic cattle anywhere. See cuts under buffalo.

water-cracker (wá'tér-krak'ér), n. 1. A water-biscuit.—2. A Prince Rupert's drop. See detonating bulb, under detonating.

A water cracker, as they [Prince Rupert's drops] are called in the factory.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LVI. 181.

water-craft (wá'tér-kráft), n. Vessels and boats plying on water.

water-crake (wá'tér-krák), n. 1. The common spotted crane of Europe, Porzana maruetta; distinguished from the land-crake, Crex pratensis.—2. The water-rail, Rallus aquaticus. Montagu.—3. The water-ouzel: a misnomer. Willughby; Ray. [Local, Eng.]

water-crane (wá'tér-krán), n. 1. An apparatus for supplying water from an elevated tank, as to the tender of a locomotive.—2. A crane operated by hydraulic power.

water-cress (wá'tér-kres), n. [< ME. water-kresse, watyprresse, waterkirs; < water + cress.] A creeping herb of springs and streams, Nasturtium officinale, from antiquity used as a spring salad, and now very widely cultivated. See cress and Nasturtium (with cut). The name is extended to the genus—N. palustre, a weedy species, being called marsh or yellow water-cress, or marsh cress.

water-crow (wá'tér-kró), n. 1. The common European coot, Fulica atra; from its blackish plumage. [Local, Eng.]—2. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.]—3. The darter, snake-bird, or water-turkey, Plotus anhimus. [Southern U. S.]

water-crowfoot (wá'tér-kró'fút), n. The name of several aquatic species of Ranunculus, primarily R. aquatilis, the common white water-crowfoot, a plant found through the north temperate zone and in Australia. The yellow water-crowfoot is R. multifidus.

watercup (wá'tér-kup), n. 1. The pennywort, Hydrocotyle; by translation of the genus name.

—2. The trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flava.

water-cure (wá'tér-kür), n. Hydrotherapy or balneotherapy; a system of medical treatment by means of water in any form or mode of application.

water-deck (wá'tér-dek), n. A painted piece of canvas used for covering the saddle and bridle, girths, etc., of a dragoon's horse. [Eng.]

water-deer (wá'tér-dēr), n. 1. A small Chinese musk-deer, Hydropotes inermis, of somewhat aquatic habits. It resembles the ordinary musk-deer in general, being of small size, hornless in both sexes, and with protrusive upper canines in the male; but some technical characters cause it to fall in another genus.

2. The African water-chevrotain. This is a traguloid, quite different from the foregoing.

water-deerlet (wá'tér-dēr'let), n. The African water-chevrotain.

water-devil (wá'tér-dev'l), n. 1. The larva or grub of various aquatic insects, as of the genus Hydrophilus. H. piceus is a common British species.—2. The dobson or hellgrammite. See Corydalis, and cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-dock (wá'tér-dok), n. A tall dock, Rumex Hydrolapathum, of temperate Europe and Asia. Also called horse- or water-sorrel. R. aquaticus also appears under this name. The great or American water-dock is R. Britannica (R. orbiculatus).

water-doctor (wá'tér-dok'tor), n. 1. A hydropathist. [Colloq.]—2. One of a former school of medical practitioners the members of which pretended that all diseases could be diagnosed by simple inspection of the urine.

water-dog (wá'tér-dog), n. 1. A dog accustomed to or delighting in the water, or trained to go into the water in pursuit of game, as a water-spaniel.—2. One of various kinds of large salamanders; a mud-puppy. See axolotl, Melopoma, and cut under hellbender. Also water-puppy.—3. A small, irregular, floating cloud in a rainy season, supposed to indicate rain. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Water-dogs, . . . dark clouds that seem to travel through the air by whiffers, and indicate a storm. Halliwell makes them identical with mares-tails, but they are distinct things in Surrey language.

G. L. Gower, Surrey Provincialisms (Eng. Dial. Soc.).

4. A sailor, especially an old sailor; a salt; one thoroughly accustomed to life in and on the water. [Colloq.]

The Sandwich Islanders are complete water-dogs, and therefore very good in boating.

R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 94.

water-dragon (wá'tér-drag'on), n. An old name of the water-aram, Calla palustris, also assigned to Caltha palustris, perhaps by confusion of the Latin names. Britten and Holland.

water-drain (wá'tér-drán), n. A drain or channel through which water may run.

water-drainage (wá'tér-drá'náj), n. The draining off of water.

water-dressing (wá'tér-dres'ing), n. The constant application of water to a wound, by immersion, irrigation, or compresses.

water-drink (wá'tér-drink), n. [< ME. water-drinck; < water + drink.] A drink of water.

Alls iff thu drunke waterdrinck.

water-drinker (wá'tér-drink'kér), n. [< ME. water drynkare; < water + drinker.] 1. A drinker of water.

Water drynkare. Aquibibus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

2. An advocate of abstinence from intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist. [Colloq.]

water-drip (wá'tér-drip), n. A pan or receptacle to receive the waste water from a water-cooler. Car-Builder's Dict.

water-drop (wá'tér-drop), n. A drop of water; specifically, a tear.

Let not women's weapons, water-drops,

Stain my man's cheeks! Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 280.

water-dropper (wá'tér-drop'ér), n. A contrivance devised by Sir William Thomson, and used particularly in the measurement of the electrical potential of the atmosphere. It consists of an insulated metallic cylinder containing water, with a projecting nozzle, from which the water is allowed to drop freely. Each drop carries with it a small charge, and finally the spout and connecting-rod gain the potential of the air; this may then be measured by a quadrant electrometer.

water-dropwort (wá'tér-drop'wért), n. The umbelliferous plant Eranthe fistulosa, or any plant of that genus. The hemlock water-dropwort is the highly poisonous E. crocata.

water-dust (wá'tér-dust), n. A collective name for the extremely minute droplets or particles of water which compose clouds and haze. [Rare.]

water-eagle (wá'tér-ē'gl), n. The fish-hawk or osprey. [Rare.]

watered (wá'tér'd), a. Marked with or exhibiting waved lines or bands bearing some resemblance to those which might be produced by the action of water. Also waved.—Watered silk, silk upon which a wave-like and changeable pattern has been produced by moistening and pressure. The name is sometimes restricted to material of which the pattern is confined to parallel lines, as distinguished from moire antique. See moire and moiré.

water-elder (wá'tér-el'dér), n. The guelder-rose, Viburnum Opulus.

water-elephant (wá'tér-el'ē-fant), n. The hippopotamus or river-horse.

water-elevator (wá'tér-el'ē-vá-tor), n. 1. Any device for raising buckets in wells, or for lifting water to a higher level for purposes of irrigation, etc.—2. A lift or elevator in which the operating force is the weight or pressure of water; a hydraulic elevator.

water-elm (wá'tér-elm), n. The common white elm, Ulmus Americana.

water-engine (wá'tér-en'jin), n. An engine to raise water; also, an engine propelled by water.

waterer (wá'tér-ér), n. 1. One who waters, in any sense of the word: as, a stock-waterer.

Neither the planter nor the waterer have any power to make it [religion] take root and grow in your hearts.

Locke, Paraphrase on 1 Cor. iii. 7.

2. That with which one waters; a vessel, utensil, or other contrivance for sprinkling water on plants, watering animals, etc.

water-eringo (wá'tér-ér-ing'gō), n. A plant, Eryngium yuccifolium (E. aquaticum), otherwise called button-snakeroot. See Eryngium.

water-ermine (wá'tér-ér'min), n. A British tiger-moth, Spilosoma urticae, chiefly white and yellow marked with black. [Eng.]

water-extractor (wá'tér-eks-trak'tor), n. In dyeing, a rotatory apparatus for freeing dyed goods from water by the action of centrifugal force.

waterfall (wá'tér-fál), n. [= D. waterval = G. wasserfall (cf. Sw. vattenfall, Dan. vandfald); as water + fall.] 1. A steep fall or flow of water from a height; a cascade; a cataract.

Down shower the gambolling waterfalls.

Tennyson, Sea-Fairies.

2. A neck-tie or scarf with long drooping ends. [Colloq.]

He was suddenly confronted in the walk by Benjamin, the Jew money-lender, smoking a cigar, and dressed in a gaudy-colored satin waistcoat and waterfall of the same material.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. iii.

3. A chignon. [Colloq.]

The brown silk net, which she had supposed thoroughly trustworthy, had given way all at once into a great hole under the waterfall, and the soft hair would fret itself through and threaten to stray untidily.

Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, iii.

water-farming (wá'tér-fár'ming), n. The cultivation of plants growing in water.

A few miles away, the native lotus grows luxuriantly, a relic, it is believed, of Indian water-farming.

Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 859.

Vogel's Water-furrow

water-furrow (wá'tér-fur-ŏ), v. t. [< water-furrow, n.] To plow or open water-furrows in; drain by means of water-furrows.

So I had to sow, water-furrow thy ground,
That rain when it cometh may run away round.

Tusser, October's Husbandry, st. 7.

water-gage (wá'tér-gáj), n. 1. Any device for indicating the height of water in a reservoir, tank, boiler, or other vessel.

The most common form is a glass tube placed on the front of a boiler, and connected at the top with a pipe opening into the steam-space above the water and below with a pipe opening into the water in the boiler. The water and steam fill the tube and indicate the height of the water in the boiler. See water-cock. Also called water indicator.

2. A wall or bank to restrain or hold back water.

[Also dial. water-gal, water-gull; = G. wasser-galle, a cavity in the earth made by a torrent, a bog, quagmire, < wasser, water, + galle, seen also in G. regen-gall, an imperfect rainbow, end or fragment of a rainbow, an oxeve, water-gall, weather-gall, appar. in orig. like leel. galli, a defect, flaw, hence a barren spot: see gall 2.]

1. A cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water. Imp. Dict.—2. An appearance in the sky regarded as presaging the approach of rain; a rainbow-colored spot; an imperfectly formed or a secondary rainbow. Also called weather-gall.

And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky;
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms. Shak., Lucresse, l. 1588.

Their reason is but a low, obscure, and imperfect shadow thereof, as the water-gall is of the rainbow.

Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 50.

I am told a second rainbow above the first is called in the Isle of Wight a water-gal.

Hall's Well (under water-dogs).

water-gang (wá'tér-gang), n. A trench or course for conveying a stream of water; a mill-race. Johnson. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

water-gap (wá'tér-gap), n. See gap, 2.

water-gas (wá'tér-gas), n. A gas, non-luminous in its pure form, derived in part from the decomposition of steam. The apparatus for making it consisted of a furnace for anthracite coal or other fuel, connected at the top with a lower filled with loose brick and called a regenerator. The products of combustion pass through the regenerator, and raise it to a white heat, steam then admitted below the furnace, and passing up through the fire and through the regenerator, is drawn off. While the steam is passing the furnace, water-gas is produced; and crude naphtha is allowed to fall through the ascending steam over the fire. Complicated chemical reactions take place, the result being the formation of quantities of fixed gas. There are also other products, chiefly allied to this. By one process the non-luminous gas is afterward enriched by the addition of a hydrocarbon, as petroleum or naphtha. Water-gas is commonly thus treated, and used as an illuminating gas; but it is also used in its non-luminous form, as a heating gas for cooking and other purposes.

water-gate (wá'tér-gat), n. [ME. watergate; < water + gate.] 1. A gateway through which water passes, or a gate by which it may be excluded or confined; a flood-gate.

To be even, out of the water-gate.

Hamlet, v. i. 11.

2. A gate by which access is gained to a river, canal, mill, or other body or supply of water.

And at the fountain gate . . . they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water-gate eastward. Neh. xii. 37.

As they reached the water-gate, the rain had ceased for a time, and a gleam of sunlight shone upon the river, and rested on the Queen's barge as it approached.

J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, iv.

3. A water-plug or valve. E. H. Knight.

water-gavel (wá'tér-gav'el), n. In Eng. law, a rent paid for fishing or any other benefit derived from a river.

water-germander (wá'tér-jér-man'dér), n. A plant. Tournefort Scordium.

water-gilder (wá'tér-gil'dér), n. One who practises the art of water-gilding.

water-gilding (wá'tér-gil'ding), n. Same as wash-gilding.

water-gillyflower (wá'tér-jil'i-flou-ér), n. The water-violet. Hottonia palustris.

water-gladiolus (wá'tér-glád'i-öl), n. See flowering rush (under rush).

water-glass (wá'tér-glás), n. 1. A water-clock or clepsydra.

Full time of defence measured by the water-glass.

Grote, Hist. Greece, ii. 72.

2. An instrument for making observations beneath the surface of water, consisting of a tube with a glass bottom; a water-telescope.

With a water-glass over the side, you look down on the bright array of fishes, whose every movement you can note.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 180.

3. Same as soluble glass (which see, under glass).

Water-glass painting may be explained . . . very briefly. It is simply water colour on dry plaster, fixed afterwards with a solution of flint applied to it in spray as the solution of gum-lac is applied to a charcoal drawing.

Hamerton, Graphic Arts, p. 236.

water-glue (wá'tér-glō), n. Waterproof glue.

The strings [of bows] being made of verie good hempe, with a kinde of watergleve to resist wet and moysture.

Sir J. Smyth, quoted in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 54.

water-god (wá'tér-god), n. In myth., a deity that presides over the waters, or over some particular body, stream, or fountain of water.

water-grampus (wá'tér-gram'pus), n. Same as grampus, 4.

water-grass (wá'tér-grás), n. 1. The manna-grass, Glyceria fluitans. [Fishermen's name.]

—2. A very succulent grass, Paspalum lare. [Southern U. S.]—3. The water-cress, Nasturtium officinale. [Ireland.]—4. Species of Equisetum.—5. The velvet-grass, Holcus. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-gruel (wá'tér-grō'el), n. Gruel made of water and meal, flour, etc., and eaten without milk; thin or weak gruel.

I could eat water-gruel with thee a month for this jest, my dear rogue.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel

Upon the Strength of Water-Gruel?

Prior, Alma, iii.

water-guard (wá'tér-gärd), n. A river or harbor police; customs officers detailed to watch ships in order to prevent smuggling or other violations of law.

water-gull (wá'tér-gul), n. A dialectal form of water-gal.

water-gum (wá'tér-gum), n. A small tree of New South Wales, Tristania nerifolia, the timber of which is close-grained and elastic, and valuable for boat-building.

water-gut (wá'tér-gut), n. An alga of the genus Ulea, natural order Ulvaceae. The most general form, U. enteromorpha, var. intestinalis, occurs in fresh as well as salt water. U. enteromorpha, var. compressa, being the more common on tidal rocks. When floating in the water these plants very much resemble the intestines of an animal (whence the name).

water-hairgrass (wá'tér-här'grás), n. A grass, Catabrosa aquatica, growing in shallow water, widely in the north temperate zone, having a panicle with many half-whorls of slender branches. Also water-chorlgrass.

water-hammer (wá'tér-ham'ér), n. 1. The concussion of a moving volume of water in a pipe or passage, caused by sudden stoppage of flow, as by the abrupt closing of a faucet.—2. The noise, resembling a blow of a hammer, caused by the presence of water in a steam-pipe when live steam is passed through it.—3. A philosophical toy consisting of a hermetically sealed tube from which the air has been exhausted and which contains some water. It is so called because the water strikes against the tube with a noise similar to that of a hammer, there being no air to impede its motion.

4. A metal hammer heated in a flame or in boiling water. Tapping the skin with this hammer for a few seconds will cause a blister. It is used as a counter-irritant on a mild cautery.

a, upper stopcock; b, lower stopcock; c, glass; d, water line.

water-hare (wá'tér-här), n. 1. The water-rabbit. See cut under sawp-hare.—2. The spotted cavy, or paca, Cabagras paca.

water-haze (wá'tér-ház), n. Haze composed of water particles, as distinguished from haze consisting mainly of particles of dust and organic matter. See haze.

water-heater (wá'tér-hè'tér), n. A heating-apparatus which performs its functions by the agency of hot water.

water-hemlock (wá'tér-hem'lok), n. 1. See Cicuta.—2. The hemlock water-dropwort, (Enanthe crocata, otherwise called dead-tongue; also C. Phellandrium, distinguished as fine-leaved water-hemlock).

water-hemp (wá'tér-hemp), n. 1. See hemp.—2. The hemp-agrimony, Eupatorium cannabinum.

water-hen (wá'tér-hen), n. Some aquatic bird likened to a hen. (a) The moorhen or gallinule of Great Britain, Gallinula chloropus. (b) The American coot, Fulica americana. (Massachusetts.) (c) An Australian bird of the rail family and genus Trogon. See cut under Trogon, and compare water-cock.—Spotted water-hen. Same as spotted rail. See rail. [Local, Eng.]

water-hickory (wá'tér-hik'ō-ri), n. Same as butter pecan (which see, under pecan).

water-hoarhound (wá'tér-hör'hound), n. A plant of the genus Lycopodium, chiefly L. Europæum.

water-hog (wá'tér-hog), n. 1. The African river-hog, Potamocharius penicillatus. See cut under Potamocharius.—2. The South American capibara, Hydrocharius capibara. Also called tailless hippopotamus and short-nosed tapir.

water-hole (wá'tér-höl), n. A hole or hollow where water collects. In Australia, a small natural or artificial reservoir; in South Africa, a natural pool, or water-pool. This word is chiefly used in Australia, where it means a small pond or pool of water, and especially such as are filled during the rainy season and dry up when that ceases, or soon after.

In the dry weather, as the small lagoons and water holes scattered all over the country [Australia] get low and dried up, large numbers of . . . wild ducks congregate on the big lagoon in front of Mount Spencer station. H. F. Hutton, Advance Australia, p. 88.

We have been drafting close here up at the one-eyed waterhole. Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head-Station, p. 84.

waterhole (wá'tér-höl), v. i.; pret. and pp. waterholed, pp. waterholing. [< water-hole, n.] In coffee-cultivation. See the quotation.

A third operation is called "trenching" or waterholing. The trenches are made across the slope, and . . . the holes are left open to act as catch-drains, and as receptacles for wash, weeds, prunings, and other vegetable matters. Spens. Eng. Manuf., I. 628.

water-horse (wá'tér-hörs), n. Same as horse-pile.

water-horsetail (wá'tér-hörs'täl), n. A plant of the genus Chara.

water-house† (wá'tér-hous), n. A house or dwelling upon the water; a ship.

The thing by her commanded is to see Dover's dreadful cliff; passing, in a poor water-house, the dangers of the merciless channel 'twixt that and Calais, five long hours' sail, with three poor weeks' victuals. Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, I. 1.

water-hyssop (wá'tér-his'op), n. See Herpestis.

water-ice (wá'tér-is), n. A preparation of water and sugar, flavored and frozen; a sherbet.

water-inch (wá'tér-inch), n. In hydraul., a measure of water equal to the quantity discharged in 24 hours through a circular opening of 1 inch diameter leading from a reservoir, under the least pressure—that is, when the water is only so high as just to cover the orifice. This quantity is very nearly 500 cubic feet.

water-indicator (wá'tér-in'di-kä-tor), n. A device for indicating the weight of water in a boiler or a tank, or for giving an alarm by permitting steam to escape, sounding a whistle, etc., when the water falls below a certain level; a water-gage.

wateriness (wá'tér-i-nes), n. The state of being watery. Arbuthnot.

watering (wá'tér-ing), n. [< late ME. watrynge, watrynge (= MLG. watering = MHG. wasserunge, G. wässerung); verbal n. of water, v.] 1. The act of one who waters, in any sense.

Doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? Luke xiii. 15.

The clouds are for the watering of the earth. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. 168.

Specifically—2. The art or process of giving to the surface of anything a wave-like or veined appearance of somewhat ornamental effect; also, the marking so produced. Compare water, v. i., 3, and watered silk (under watered).—3. A watering-place: as, "the watering of Saint Thomas" (better known as Saint Thomas a Watering), Chaucer, Gen. l. 101, to C. T., I. 826.—4. In flux-manuf., same as retting, 1.—Watering of the mouth, an abundant secretion of saliva excited, through a reflex nervous influence, by the suggestion, smell, or sight of appetizing food.

watering-call (wá'tér-ing-kál), n. Milit., a call or sound of a trumpet on which cavalry assemble to water their horses.

watering-can (wá'tér-ing-kan), n. Same as watering-pot.

watering-cart (wá'tér-ing-kärt), n. 1. A barrel or cistern mounted on wheels, used for watering plants. Various special forms are made, as one for watering plants in drills, the water escaping through perforated pipes set at the proper distances apart.

2. A large tank, of whatever form, mounted on a wagon-body, used for watering streets.

watering-house (wá'tér-ing-hous), n. A house or tavern where water is obtained for cab-horses, etc. Compare waterman, 2.

Carriages . . . roll swiftly by; watermen, . . . who have been shouting and rushing about for the last two hours, retire to their watering-houses, to solace themselves with the creature comforts of pipes and puri.

Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, II. watering-place (wá'tér-ing-plás), n. [< ME. watryng-place; < watering + place.] 1. A place where water may be obtained, as for drinking, for watering cattle, or for supplying ships.

Watryng Place, where beasty's byn wateryd. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

The force will have to trust to known watering-places where there are wells.

Col. Fagholer, in E. Sutorius's In the Soudan, p. 56.

2. Especially, a place of resort for a particular kind of water, as mineral water; a well, spring, town, etc., famous for its waters; in later use, a bathing-place; a seaside resort; loosely, any summer resort.

The discovery of a saline spring . . . suggested to a too constructive brain the possibility of turning Treby Magna into a fashionable watering-place.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, III.

The term [watering-places] was naturally extended to include places resorted to for sea bathing, and sometimes, as at Scarborough, the visitors could either have the benefit of the spa or the salt water, that famous watering-place having both of these attractions.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 378.

watering-pot (wá'tér-ing-pot), n. 1. A vessel, usually a somewhat tall can, most often of cylindrical section, sometimes oval, with a long spout springing from near the base, used for watering plants and for other similar purposes, as sprinkling sidewalks. The spout is generally fitted with a rose, often movable, for distributing the water in a number of fine streams. It is usually made of tin-plate or galvanized sheet-iron, and is intended to be managed by hand. Also called watering-can.

2. In conch., any species of the genus Aspergillum, as A. vaginiferum. These are true bivalves of the family Gastrochenedæ (or Tubicolidæ), not distantly related to the teredos, and all bore into hard substances. The valves proper are very small in comparison with the long hard tube with which they are soldered. The species named has this tube cylindrical and clubbed or knobbed at both ends, with one end closed by a perforated plate, the whole formation suggesting the sprinkler of a watering-pot. It inhabits the Red Sea, and other species of Aspergillum are found in Indo-Pacific waters. Also called watering-pot shell.

watering-trough (wá'tér-ing-tróf), n. A trough in which water is provided for domestic animals.

water-injector (wá'tér-in-jek-tor), n. See injector.

waterish (wá'tér-ish), a. [Formerly also waterish; *< ME. *waterish, < AS. wæterisc; as water + -ish*.] 1. Abounding in or containing water; sprinkled, moistened, or diluted with water; watery; aqueous.

Frost is wheresoever is any waterish humour, as is in all woods, either more or less; and you know that all things frozen and icy will rather break than bend.

Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 115. Not all the dukes of waterish Burundy Can buy this unprired precious maid of me.

Shak., Lear, I. 1. 261.

2. Consisting mainly of water; hence, thin; weak; poor.

Such nice and waterish diet. Shak., Othello, III. 3. 15.

3. Juicy; succulent. [Rare.]

The Summer

Invited my then ranging eyes to look on Large fields of ripen'd corn, presenting trifles Of waterish pette dainties.

Dekker and Ford, Sun's Darling, IV.

4. Pertaining to water, or having something of its characters; insipid: as, a waterish color or feel.

Some [flowers] of a sad or darke greene, some waterishe, blunkette, gray, grassie, hoarie, and Leeke coloured.

Touchstone of Complexions, p. 100.

Of waterish taste, the flesh not firme, like English beefe. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 386.

waterishness (wá'tér-ish-nes), n. The state or character of being waterish.

Waterishness, which is like the serosity of our blood. Floyer.

water-jacket (wá'tér-jak'et), n. A casing containing water placed about something to keep it cool, or otherwise regulate its temperature. Compare water-mantle and water-box.

water-joint (wá'tér-joint), n. A joint through which water will not leak, as in the framework of a water-gate, the junction of two water-pipes, the gates of canal-locks, etc.

water-junket (wá'tér-jung'ket), n. The common sandpiper of Great Britain, Tringoides hypoleucos.

water-kelpie (wá'tér-kel'pi), n. A spirit or demon supposed to dwell in water. See kelpie.

The bonny grey mare did sweat for fear, For she heard the water-kelpy roaring. Annan Water (Child's Ballads, II. 189).

water-kind† (wá'tér-kind), n. [< ME. waterkinde; < water + kind.] Water; the elements of water.

Latin boe seggth thatt Ennou Bitacnethth waterkinde. Ormulum (ed. White), I. 18087.

water-lade (wá'tér-läd), n. A channel or trench for conducting water; a drain; a gutter.

The chanel were not skoured . . . for riverets and Brookes to passe away, but the water-lades stopped up either through negligence or depopulation.

water-laid (wá'tér-läd), a. Noting three ropes laid into one: same as cable-laid.

Waterlander (wá'tér-lan'dér), n. [< D. Waterland, a district in North Holland, + -er.] One of the liberal wing of the Mennonites of the Netherlands. Beginning with less strict views of excommunication than those of the conservative wing, they gradually moved in the direction of still greater liberality, exchanged the name of Mennonites for Doopsgezinden (Baptist persuasion), refused to condemn any one for opinions which the Bible did not expressly pronounce essential to salvation, cooperated with William the Silent, and even accepted civil office. The division between them and their opponents gradually disappeared, and the two wings are now united in Holland on substantially the liberal basis of the Waterlanders. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 12.

water-language (wá'tér-lang'gwäj), n. Jocular abuse; chaff. [Rare.]

'Twas all water-language at these times, and no exceptions were to be taken. Amhurst, Terre Filius, No. 1.

water-laverock (wá'tér-lav'er-ok), n. Same as sandy laverock (which see, under laverock).

water-leader† (wá'tér-lè'dér), n. [< ME. waterleder (cf. D. waterleiding = G. wasserleitung = Sw. vattenledning = Dan. vandledning, aqueeduct); < water + leader.] A water-carrier.

The cakis and water-lederes. York Plays, p. 307.

waterleaf (wá'tér-léf), n. 1. Any plant of the genus Hydrophyllum (which see).—2. Paper in the first stage of manufacture, after it has been pressed between the felts: a technical use.

The structure of the waterleaf may be regarded as an interlacement of vegetable fibres in every direction.

Ure, Diet., III. 514.

water-leech† (wá'tér-lèch), n. [< ME. waterleche, waterleche; < water + leech.] Same as horse-leech.

Waterlechs two ben dogtris, seiende, Bring on, bring on. Wyclif, Prov. xxx. 15.

water-leg (wá'tér-leg), n. In steam-boilers, a vertical water-space connecting other water-spaces, and crossing a flue-space, by which its contents are heated.

water-lemon (wá'tér-lem'on), n. A species of passion-flower, Passiflora laurifolia, native in the West Indies and tropical South America, and cultivated there and in other warm countries; also, and primarily, its fruit. The latter is lemon-colored, oval in form, of the size of a peach, having a soft skin, and a very juicy pulp of a pleasant subacid flavor. The vine has the leaves entire, the flowers white with red blotches, the crown violet with white streaks. P. maliformis, the sweet calabash, with a smaller fruit of similar flavor, is sometimes included under the name. The wild water-lemon is P. foetida, otherwise called (West Indian) water-meter (wá'tér-mē'tér), n. 1. An instrument that measures the quantity of water that passes through it, as a gas-meter measures gas. There are various contrivances for this purpose. See cuts on following page.—2. An instrument for determining the amount Water-meters.

A. a, case; b, inlet and outlet; c, hard rubber rotating piston; d, gyrating spindle which drives the registering mechanism e, by means of a connection f; g, dial.

B. a, a', case, composed of two cylinders cast integrally; b, one of the two plungers; c, valve actuated by a, controlling the flow into and out of the cylinder a'. A similar valve in a controls the flow into and out of a, and in this way the plunger in each cylinder governs the flow into and out of the other. The plungers are hollow, and have very nearly the specific gravity of water. Their reciprocations, through a connection (not shown), drive the registering mechanism d. The inlet (not shown) is opposite the outlet e.

of water evaporated in a given time, as from a steam-boiler.

water-milfoil (wā'tēr-mil'foil), n. See milfoil.

water-mill (wā'tēr-mil), n. A mill whose machinery is driven by water.

There are in this City 200. Schooles, 200. Innes, 400. water-miles, 600. water-Conduits, 700. Temples and Oratories. Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 47.

water-mint (wā'tēr-mint), n. The bergamot-mint, Mentha aquatica, an herb of wet places in Europe and Asiatic Russia, naturalized in other localities, growing sparingly in the eastern United States. It affords a perfumers' oil. The water-mint or brook-mint of early usage was M. sylvestris. See mint 2.

Those which perfume the air most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three—that is, burnet, wild thyme, and water-mints. Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1587), p. 444.

water-mite (wā'tēr-mīt), n. Any mite of the family Hydrachnidæ; a water-tick. See Hydrachnidæ, and cut under Hydrachna. Also called water-spider.

water-moccasin (wā'tēr-mok'ā-sin), n. A water-adder: a name applied with little discrimination in the United States to several species of aquatic snakes; properly, the venomous Toxicophis or Aneidesodon piscivorus, with which the harmless Tropidonotus (or Nerodia) sipedon is sometimes confounded. See water-snake, and cut under moccasin.

water-mole (wā'tēr-mōl), n. 1. A desman; a member of the genus Myogale. See cut under desman.—2. The duck-mole, or duck-billed platypus, Ornithorhynchus paradoxus. See cut under duckbill.

water-monitor (wā'tēr-mon'i-tōr), n. A large water-lizard of the family Monitoridæ or Varanidæ; any aquatic monitor, or varan. One of the best-known is the Indian kabaragoya, or two-handed monitor, Monitor or Varanus salvator, attaining a length of 5 or 6 feet. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-monkey (wā'tēr-mung'ki), n. A globular vessel with a straight upright neck, commonly of earthenware, used in tropical countries for holding water.

water-moss (wā'tēr-mōs), n. A moss of the genus Fontinalis (which see).

water-moth (wā'tēr-mōth), n. A caddis-fly: so called from its aquatic habits and resemblance to a moth. See cut under caddis-worm.

Every good disciple of Walton and lover of the "gentle art" knows the value of the caddis-fly or water-moth as bait. Riley, 5th Mo. Ent. Rep., p. 16.

water-motor (wā'tēr-mō'tōr), n. Any water-wheel or turbine; in a narrower and the more common sense, any form of small motor using water under pressure, and serving to drive light machinery, such as printing-presses and sewing-machines. Such motors are made in the form of over-shot wheels inclosed in a casing, reciprocating pistons in cylinders, and rotary engines. Another form is a small turbine designed to be fitted to a common house supply-pipe. Small engines with oscillating cylinders are also a, case supported on legs; A, gate-valve for regulating flow; b, buckets or floats attached to the outer margin of a disk keyed to the shaft of the band-wheel f. The buckets c play in an annular enlargement e of the case as they receive the impact of the stream flowing through b. The water is discharged at d.

used. Another form, employing the pressure of a large body of water to raise a smaller quantity, is called a water-pressure pump, but is essentially a water-motor used as a pump.

water-mouse (wā'tēr-mous), n. An Australian murine rodent of the genus Hydromys and subfamily Hydromyinae. See cut under beaver-rat.

White-bellied water-mouse. See white-bellied.

Yellow-bellied water-mouse. See yellow-bellied.

water-murrain (wā'tēr-mur'ān), n. A disease among cattle.

water-net (wā'tēr-net), n. See Hydrodictyon.

water-newt (wā'tēr-nūt), n. An aquatic newt; a triton. See cuts under newt and axolotl.

water-nixy (wā'tēr-nik'si), n. [After G. was-serius; < water + nix.] A water-spirit; an elf inhabiting the water.

The shallowness of a water-nixy's soul may have a charm until she becomes didactic. George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxxv.

water-nut (wā'tēr-nut), n. The large edible seed of plants of the genus Trapa, or the plant itself: also called Singhara nut. See cut under Trapa.

water-nymph (wā'tēr-nimf), n. 1. A Naiad.—2. A plant of the genus Najas.—3. The water-lily, Castalia (Nymphaea).

water-oak (wā'tēr-ōk), n. 1. In bot., an oak, Quercus aquatica, of the southern United States, most common and best developed along streams in the eastern Gulf States. Its wood is heavy, hard, and coarse-grained, and does not appear to be used except for fuel. Also duck-, possum-, or punk-oak.—2. Same as pin-oak.

water-oats (wā'tēr-ōts), n. pl. See Indian rice (a), under rice 1.

water-opossum (wā'tēr-ō-pos'um), n. The South American yapok. See cut under yapok.

water-ordeal (wā'tēr-ōr'dē-al), n. See ordeal, 1.

water-organ (wā'tēr-ōr'gan), n. See hydraulic organ, under organ 1.

water-ouzel (wā'tēr-ō'zəl), n. See ouzel.

water-oven (wā'tēr-uv'n), n. In chem., an oven surrounded on all sides but the front or top with a chamber of boiling water or steam, used for drying chemical preparations, etc.

water-ox (wā'tēr-oks), n.; pl. water-oxen (-oks'n). The water-cow.

Water-oxen turned up their noses at us.

Littell's Living Age, CLXI. 88.

water-padda (wā'tēr-pad'ā), n. A South African toad, Breviceps gibbosus.

water-pang (wā'tēr-pang), n. Pyrosis.

water-parsley (wā'tēr-pārs'li), n. 1. One of several water-loving umbelliferous plants. [Eng.]—2. See Richardsonia.

water-parsnip (wā'tēr-pārs'nip), n. A plant of the genus Sium, especially S. latifolium. See cut under skirret.

water-parting (wā'tēr-pār'ting), n. Same as watershed.

The high land which forms the divisional line between two contiguous river-basins is called the water-parting. Instead of water-parting some writers employ the term watershed. Huxley, Physiography, p. 18.

water-partridge (wā'tēr-pār'trij), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. G. Trumbull, 1888. See cut under Erismatura. [Patuxent river, Maryland.]

water-passage (wā'tēr-pas'āj), n. A passage for water; specifically, the urethra.

water-pennywort (wā'tēr-pen'i-wért), n. Same as marsh-pennywort.

water-pepper (wā'tēr-pep'ēr), n. 1. The smartweed, Polygonum Hydropiper. The mild water-pepper is P. hydropiperoides.—2. Same as waterwort, 1.

water-persicaria (wā'tēr-pēr-si-kā'ri-ā), n. See persicaria.

water-pewit (wā'tēr-pā-wit), n. See pewit (c) and Sayornis.

water-pheasant (wā'tēr-fez'ant), n. 1. The Chinese jacana, Hydrophasianus chirurgus. See cut under Hydrophasianus.—2. The pintail or a congeneric duck, having a long tail. See pheasant (d) (5), and cut under Dafila.—3. The goosander, Mergus merganser; also, the hooded merganser, Lophodytes cucullatus.

waterphone (wā'tēr-fōn), n. [Irreg. < water + Gr. φωνή, voice, sound, simulating telephone.] An instrument for observing the flow of water in pipes and the detection of leaks, when the pipes are laid underground or in other inaccessible places. A common form consists of a metallic diaphragm arranged in an ear-trumpet after a manner analogous to a telephone receiver, and having a slender rod of steel connected with the diaphragm in such a way as not to touch the trumpet. In use the free end of the rod is placed upon the pipe to be examined, and the ear, placed at the trumpet, is thus enabled to hear distinctly sounds that, without this device, would be entirely inaudible.

water-piet (wā'tēr-pī'et), n. The water-ouzel or dipper, Cinclus aquaticus. Also water-pyet. See cut under dipper. Montagu. [Prov. Eng.]

water-pig (wā'tēr-pig), n. 1. A porpoise.—2. The capibara (which see, with cut).—3. A fish, the gourami.

water-pillar (wā'tēr-pil'ār), n. 1†. A water-spout.—2. On a railroad, an upright pipe with a swinging hollow arm or gooseneck, placed beside the track for supplying water to locomotives; a water-crane.

water-pimpernel (wā'tēr-pim'pēr-nel), n. See pimpernel.

water-pine (wā'tēr-pin), n. See pinel.

water-pipe (wā'tēr-pip), n. [< ME. water-pipe; < water + pipe.] 1. A pipe for conveying water. Wright, Vocabulary.

Single I grew, like some green plant, whose root Creeps to the garden water-pipes beneath, Feeding the flower. Tennyson, Fair Women.

2. A waterspout. [Archaic.]

One deep calleth another, because of the noise of the water-pipes. Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. xlii. 9.

water-pipit (wā'tēr-pip'it), n. One of several species of Anthus which are common in various parts of Europe, especially that usually called A. aquaticus, also A. spinoletta, and more correctly A. spinoletta. See Anthus and pipit.

waterpitt, n. [ME. waterput, < AS. waterpitt; as water + pitt.] A pit of water. Trevisa, III. 401.

water-pitcher (wā'tēr-pich'ēr), n. 1. A pitcher for holding water.—2. A plant of the order Sarraceniacæ, including the common pitcher-plant or sidesaddle-flower. See cut under pitcher-plant.

water-plane (wā'tēr-plān), n. In ship-building, a plane passing through a vessel when afloat, on a level with the surface of the water. When the vessel has her stores and equipments only on board, such a plane is a light water-plane; when she is loaded, it is a load water-plane. Compare water-line.

water-plant (wā'tēr-plant), n. A plant which grows in water; an aquatic plant.

water-plantain (wā'tēr-plat'tān), n. A plant of the genus Alisma, chiefly A. Plantago, the common or great water-plantain, growing in shallow water throughout the temperate northern hemisphere, reappearing in Australia. Its leaves in form and arrangement suggest those of the common plantain, but are not ridgy; the flowers are small and white-petaled, borne in an open panicle a foot or two long. A smaller species is A. ranunculoides; a floating species, A. natans; both are European.

water-plate (wā'tēr-plāt), n. A plate having a double bottom or a lining of different material, with a space left in which hot water can be put, to keep articles of food warm.

This kind of dish [sentiment], above all, requires to be served up hot or sent off in water-plates, that your friend may have it almost as warm as yourself.

Lamb, Distant Correspondents.

water-platter (wā'tēr-plat'ēr), n. The royal water-lily, Victoria regia: so named with reference to its broad floating leaves with upturned margin.

water-plow (wā'tēr-plou), n. A machine formerly used for taking mud, etc., out of rivers. Halliwel.

water-poise (wā'tēr-poiz), n. A hydrometer, or instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of different liquids.

water-pore (wā'tēr-pōr), n. 1. In zool., the pore or orifice by which a water-tube of any water-vascular system opens to the exterior.—2. In bot., an aperture or pore in the epidermis

Who all the morn
Had from the quarry with his pick-axe torne
A large well-squared stone, which he would cut
To serve his stile, or for some water-shut.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastors. (Nares.)

waterside (wá'tér-sid), n. The brink of water; the bank or margin of a river, stream, or lake; the sea-shore; sometimes used attributively.

Come, Master Belch, I will bring you to the water-side, perhaps to Wapping, and there I'll leave you.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1.

Water-side insects are best described, particularly the ephemerae.
The Academy, April 25, 1891, p. 302.

water-silvering (wá'tér-sil'vèr-ing), n. A process of silvering analogous to water-gilding.

water-sink (wá'tér-sing), n. See pot-hole.

water-skin (wá'tér-skin), n. A vessel or bag of skin used for the storage or transportation of water.

We had water, it is true, from the Nile; but we never thought we could have too much, as long as there was room in our water-skins to hold more.
Brue, Source of the Nile, I. 177.

water-skipper (wá'tér-skip'ér), n. One of the slender long-legged water-bugs of the genus Hygrotrachus; any water-strider.

water-sky (wá'tér-ski), n. A peculiar reflection in the sky, common in arctic regions, indicating the presence of open water beneath.

Some circumstances which he reports seem to point to the existence of a north water all the year round; and the frequent water-skies, fogs, &c., that we have seen to the southwest during the winter go to confirm the fact.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., I. 236.

water-slater (wá'tér-slá'tér), n. Any aquatic isopod or slater of the genus Asellus.

water-smartweed (wá'tér-smárt'wéd), n. See smartweed.

water-smoke (wá'tér-smók), n. Water evaporating in the visible form of fog or mist; a phenomenon that occurs when the temperature of water-surfaces is above the dew-point of the air, and the air is already saturated with moisture. Water-smoke is frequently observed over rivers or other bodies of water after a sudden fall of temperature, when, in popular language, it is said "the river steams," and in damp weather over water-covered surfaces which are much warmer than the air, and is also seen frequently in arctic regions.

We had not been able to get the dogs out when the big moon appeared above the water-smoke.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., II. 32.

water-snail (wá'tér-snāl), n. 1. An aquatic pulmonate gastropod; a pond-snail, as a limneid, or one of many similar snails. See cuts under Limnæa and Limnæidæ.—2. The Archimedeian screw. [Rare.]

water-snake (wá'tér-snāk), n. A snake which frequents the water: variously applied.

In the Friendly Islands the water-snake was much respected.
Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilisation, p. 179.

Especially—(a) any one of the venomous sea-snakes. See Hydrophidæ and sea-serpent, 2, with cuts there or there cited. (b) The Indian Fordonia unicolor, or any member of the family Homalopsidæ. (c) A wart-snake; any member of the Acrochordidæ, as species of Acrochordus and Chersydrus. See cut under wart-snake. (d) The common ringed snake of Europe, Tropidonotus natrix. See cuts under snake and Tropidonotus. (e) In the United States, one of several harmless aquatic colubines, as the species of Nerodia (or Tropidonotus) and Regina, as N. sipedon and R. leberis. In the West several species of garter-snakes (Eutania) are thoroughly aquatic, and would come locally under this name. See water-adder and water-moccasin.

water-soak (wá'tér-sók), v. t. To soak or fill the interstices of with water.

water-socks (wá'tér-soks), n. pl. The white water-lily, Catalpa speciosa. Britten and Holland.

water-sodden (wá'tér-sod'n), a. [< pot + sodden, pp. of seethe.] Soaked and softened in water; water-soaked. Tennyson.

water-soldier (wá'tér-sól'jér), n. The water-sagegreen, Stratiotes aloides. Also called water-aloe.

water-sorrel (wá'tér-sor'el), n. Same as water-dock.

water-souchy (wá'tér-sou'chi), n. Fish boiled and served in its own liquor. See zoutch, v. t.

water-space (wá'tér-spās), n. That part of a steam-boiler which lies below the steam-space, and is designed to hold the water to be evaporated.

water-spaniel (wá'tér-span'yel), n. The name given to two varieties of the dog called spaniel, namely, the large water-spaniel and the small water-spaniel. See spaniel, 1.

water-sparrow (wá'tér-spar'ō), n. 1. The reed-bunting or reed-sparrow, Emberiza schanius. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A reed- or sedge-warbler of the genus Acrocephalus, as A. streperus or A. phragmitis. [Prov. Eng.]

water-speedwell (wá'tér-spéd'wel), n. See speedwell.

water-spider (wá'tér-spi'dér), n. 1. A spider of the family Drassidæ, Argyroneta aquatica, which makes a bag of silk on water-plants, and lives in it under water as in a diving-bell, the opening being below, so that the air cannot escape. It is filled by the spider, which brings down bubbles of air one at a time. See diving-spider, and cut under Argyroneta.—2. Any one of certain spiders of the lycosid genus Dolomedes, as D. tenebrosus, D. urinator, or D. scapunctatus, which build nests of leaves and twigs on overhanging rushes, just at the surface of the water in shallow streams; a raft-spider. The spiders construct their cocoons and live in these nests. They run rapidly over and dive beneath the surface of the water, where they can remain for some time.

3. A water-mite or water-tick.—4. A bug of the genus Hydrometra; a water-measurer. Encyc. Diet.

water-spike (wá'tér-spik), n. A plant of the genus Potamogeton, which consists of aquatics with small greenish or reddish flowers in spikes or heads; pondweed.

water-spinner (wá'tér-spin'ér), n. A water-spider; especially, the diving spider.

waterspout (wá'tér-spout), n. 1. A pipe, nozzle, or orifice from which water is spouted.

The manner in which he gazed at the shops, stumbled into the gutters, ran against the porters, and stood under the waterspouts, marked him out as an excellent subject for the operations of swindlers and banterers.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., iii.

Every dozen or fifteen miles is a station—two or three sheds, and a water-spout and woodpile.
S. Bowles, Our New West, p. 50.

2. A spout, jet, or column of water; specifically, a whirlwind over a body of water, producing the appearance of a solid column of water extending from the surface to the clouds. In reality, however, the phenomenon that is seen is the cloud brought down to the earth's surface by the rapid gyratory motion of a vertical whirl, and it consists simply of fine mist surrounding a central axis of rarefaction. At first the cloud has the form of a tapering funnel; then, descending to near the water's surface, it draws up the water for a distance into its vortex, and imparts to it its whirling motion. The spout is then complete, and appears as an immense column connecting sea and cloud, light in color near the center, but dark along the sides. Like other whirlwinds, the waterspout has a progressive as well as a rotary motion, its axis sometimes being inclined forward in the direction of advance. After continuing a short time, generally less than twenty minutes, the column is disunited, the lower part descending as rain, while the upper part is drawn back into the clouds. The height of the spout depends upon the hygrometric state of the air; in general it is between 800 and 2,500 feet. It is common for a number of waterspouts to be seen simultaneously or successively; and this is to be expected, for a series of separate and independent gyrations are likely to arise when the air is in a state of instability, such as is required for the development of these whirlwinds. This is especially the case in tropical and equatorial regions, where waterspouts are most frequent.

Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts.
Ps. xlii. 7.

water-sprite (wá'tér-sprít), n. A sprite or spirit inhabiting the water.

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist!
And still it near'd and near'd;
As if it dodged a water-spirt,
It plunged and took'd and veer'd.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

water-stairs (wá'tér-stārz), n. pl. Stairs leading down to water, as on the banks of the Thames, where boats are taken for ferriage, etc.

He has but a tender weak body, but was always very temperate; — made him damnable drunk at Somerset-house, where, at the water-stayes, he fell down, and had a cruel fall.
Aubrey, Lives (Edmund Waller).

water-standing (wá'tér-stan'ding), a. Wet with water; perpetually filled with tears. [Rare.]

An orphan's water-standing eye.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 6. 40.

water-star (wá'tér-stār), n. Same as star-fruit.

water-stargrass (wá'tér-stār'grās), n. An aquatic herb, Heteranthera (Schollera) graminea, with grass-like leaves and yellow starry flowers.

water-starwort (wá'tér-stār'wért), n. See Calitriche and star-grass.

waterstead (wá'tér-sted), n. The bed of a river. Admiral Smyth.

water-stream (wá'tér-strēm), n. [< ME. water-stream, < AS. water-strēam; as water + stream.] A stream of water; a river.

Forr all awa se waterstrēm . . . fletethth forth . . . towardd to sē.
Ormulum (ed. White), l. 18092.

water-strider (wá'tér-strí'dér), n. Any aquatic heteropterous insect of the family Hydro- batidæ; a water-skipper: so called from their long, slender, straddling legs and aquatic habits.

The water striders prefer quiet waters, upon which they rest, or over which they skim rapidly.
Comstock, Introd. Entom. (1888), p. 193.

water-supply (wá'tér-su-plí'), n. The obtaining of water for and its distribution to a town or city, as far as possible in sufficient quantity and of satisfactory quality; also, the amount of water thus provided and distributed. Water-supply, as this term is generally used, differs from irrigation in that the latter has to do with providing and distributing water for agricultural purposes—that is, it is an attempt to make up for a deficiency of, or for irregularity in, the natural rainfall. Water-supply, on the other hand, is the providing of water for domestic and manufacturing uses in sufficient quantity, and under favorable conditions, not only as to purity, but also as to pressure, so that it may be available without the necessity of carrying it by hand to the upper stories of houses or manufactories, and as to storage, so that large quantities can be extinguishing extensive conflagrations in cities. The question of water-supply is one which has to do, and to a most important extent, with the health, comfort, and material well-being of all localities, even where there is only a moderately dense aggregation of population; and the larger and denser such aggregation the more important this question becomes. The natural source of water-supply is the rain, and this is one of great importance in regions of considerable rainfall and of thinly aggregated population, the water being caught on the roofs of the houses or barns and conveyed to cisterns where it is stored for use as wanted, and from which it has to be pumped. Almost everywhere in regions of considerable precipitation water can be had by digging shallow wells in the surface detritus, and this is an extremely common mode of supply in agricultural districts, the advantage being that the expense of digging a well is much less than that of providing storage in cisterns, while the disadvantage is that well-water is ordinarily not so pure as rain-water (and this is emphatically the case in limestone districts). Besides, it is almost impossible to provide cisterns large enough to hold the amount of rain-water required during periods of abnormally long drought, such as occasionally occur even in regions of considerable average rainfall. These sources of supply—namely, rain caught as it falls and water from shallow wells—are entirely unsuited to the conditions in towns of even moderate size. The rainfall in cities is contaminated with soot and gases thrown out from the many chimneys of houses and manufacturing establishments; neither is it large enough in quantity, nor can it be stored satisfactorily without incurring an expense far greater than would be that of providing a supply in some other way. Rivers would seem to be the natural source of supply for cities situated upon them, and there are few very large cities through which a river does not run; but rivers are the natural and almost necessary sewers of the cities drained by them, and the water, thus polluted, is not only often disagreeable to the taste, but is always a possible source of danger to health. It is true that some cities of moderate size situated on very large rivers do use their water, as, for instance, St. Louis on the Mississippi; but, in general, if a river is used, the water must be taken from a point high enough up-stream to avoid the risk of contamination from the sewage of the towns situated on or near its banks, as is done in London, which is largely supplied by water from the Thames drawn from a point far above the city. The most satisfactory source of water-supply for a city is a mountain-lake, not too far distant, where the geological and other conditions are such as to insure a high degree of purity in the water. This is emphatically the case with regard to Glasgow, which is supplied from Loch Katrine. Much oftener water satisfactory in quality and abundant in quantity can be obtained by creating one or more artificial lakes at the head of a suitably situated river by the construction of dams; these are sometimes of great height, holding back bodies of water miles in length. Of this character is the water-supply of Liverpool, of New York, of Boston, and of many other important cities. Regions underlain by thick masses of permeable rocks—as, for instance, the New Red Sandstone and Chalk districts of England—are not infrequently supplied with water by means of wells bored to considerable depths and of large dimensions, from which the water sometimes rises to the surface, but more often has to be pumped. Many large towns in the manufacturing districts of England were formerly almost exclusively, and are still to some extent, supplied in this way; but wherever it has been found possible to obtain water in some better way this system has been abandoned, neither quality nor quantity being satisfactory. Considerable water is procured in England from deep wells in the Chalk, and this method of supply is of some importance in London. Where the conditions are such that pure water cannot be had, artificial purification is sometimes resorted to, but this is always expensive and often unsatisfactory. An abundant supply of soft water, taken from some source known to be free from the possibility of contamination by sewage or otherwise, is one of the greatest of blessings, and this result has been attained in various cities, but not without large expenditure and no small amount of engineering skill. The distribution of water was once a matter of considerable difficulty, the wooden pipes first employed being subject to rot and leakage. In modern times the use of cast-iron for the mains is most common, while the service-pipes are usually of lead, but sometimes of bronze or brass.

water-system (wá'tér-sis'tem), n. In zool., the water-vascular system.

water-tabby (wá'tér-tab'i), n. Tabby having a watered surface.

water-table (wá'tér-tā'bl), n. 1. In arch., a string-course, molding, or other projecting water-tree (wá'tér-trí), n. See Tetracera.— Red water tree, see Fraxinus.

water-trefoil (wá'tér-tré'fóil), n. Same as water-trunk (wá'tér-trungk), n. A cistern of planks lined with lead to hold water. Sim- water-tube (wá'tér-túb), n. 1. A pipe for rainwater.—2. One of a set of tubes which open upon the exterior of various invertebrates, and into which water may enter. They are supposed to be the excretory or respiratory orifices analogous to that of the vertebrates. See water-lung, water-vascular, and compare water-lung.—Water-tube boiler, a form of boiler in which the water circulates through pipes, and the flame water-tube boiler.

water-tupelo (wá'tér-tú'pé-lo), n. A form (Nyssa sylvatica) of the black-gum or pepperidge, Nyssa sylvatica, having the base of the trunk greatly enlarged or swollen, found in ponds and swamps in the southern United States.

water-turkey (wá'tér-tér'ki), n. 1. The andler or stake-bird, Plotus anahing. See dar- ter, 3 (b) (1), and cut under anhinga. [Southern U. S.]—2. The wood-ibis, Tantulus locula- tus, more fully called Colorado water-turkey.
See wood-ibis, and cut under Tantulus. [Southwestern U. S.]

water-twist (wá'tér-twíst), n. The trade-name for cotton yarn spun on a water-frame. See water-frame.

water-tywer (wá'tér-twí'ér), n. In metal, a furnace blast-pipe or tywer kept cool (to prevent the burning of the nozzle) by means of a stream of water constantly passing through a pipe carried around or beside it.

water-vacuole (wá'tér-vak'ü-öl), n. One of the temporary vacuoles of many protozoans, consisting of a globule of water taken in with a particle of food. The circulation of these food-vacu-oles or temporary stomachs presents a water-vascular system of the most primitive kind. See water-vascular.

water-varnish (wá'tér-vär'nish), n. A varnish made by using water as a solvent.—Lac water- varnish. See lac.

water-vascular (wá'tér-vas kü-lär), a. In biol., pertaining to or providing for circulation of water in the body of an animal. The water-vascular system is seen in its utmost simplicity in infusorians, and in various degrees of complexity in higher invertebrates—in trematode worms, for example. Water-lungs and water-tubes belong to the water-vascular system. See also cut under Dalamoglossus, Proctucha, Rhabdonia, and Rothia.

water-vine (wá'tér-vín), n. 1. A plant of the genus Phytocera.—2. A climbing shrub, Doli- carpus Calhouni of the Dilleniaceae, found in tropical America. [West Indies.]

water-violet (wá'tér-ví'ö-let), n. (a) A plant of the genus Hottonia, primarily H. palustris:
so called from the likeness of its flowers to those of the stock-gillyflower, once called vio- let. Butten and Holland. See featherfoil. (b) Sometimes, same as lance-leaved violet (which see, under violet).

water-viper (wá'tér-ví'pér), n. See viper.

water-vole (wá'tér-völ), n. The common water-scut or vole of Europe, Arvicola amphibius.
See cut under water-rat.

The sudden dive of a water vole.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

water-wagtail (wá'tér-wag'tál), n. 1. A wagtail most properly so called; any species of Motacilla in a strict sense, as distinguished from Budytes. In England the name commonly specifies the pied wagtail, Motacilla lugubris.
See cut under wagtail.—2. Same as water- wagtail. 1. Gray water-wagtail, yellow waterwagtail. Same as gray wagtail (which see, under wag- tail).

waterway (wá'tér-wá), n. [< ME. water-wey,
AS waterweg; as water + wey.] 1. A channel or passage of water; a water-route; specifically, that part of a river, arm of the sea, or the like through which vessels enter or depart;
the fairway.

The Thames was already a waterway by which London could communicate with the heart of England, no town save Oxford has as yet arisen along its course.

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 419.

2. In ship-building, a name given to the thick planks at the outside of the deck, worked over the ends of the beams, and fitting against the inside of the top-timbers, to which, as well as to the ends of the beams, they are bolted, thus forming an important binding. Their inner edge is hollowed out to form a channel for water to run off the deck. In iron vessels the waterway assumes many different forms. See cut under beam, 2 (c).

The spencers we bent on very carefully, . . . and, making tackles fast to the clews, hauled them down to the water-ways. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 258.

The Waterway, as its name would suggest, is a portion of the hull so situated that, in addition to its other functions, it forms a channel for carrying water to the scuppers on each side of the ship. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 200.

water-weak (wá'tér-wék), a. Weak as water;
very feeble or weak.

If merrie now, anone with woe I weepe,

If histic now, forthwith am water weak.

Davies, Muse's Sacrifice, p. 10. (Davies.)

water-weed (wá'tér-wé'd), n. 1. Any wild aquatic plant without special use or beauty.

The willful water-weeds held me thrall.

S. Lowry, The Century, XXVII, 519.

2. Specifically, the choke-pondweed or waterthyme, Elodea Canadensis (Anacharis Alsinas- trum), of the Hydrocharitaceae. See pondweed and Babington's-curse.

water-weevil (wá'tér-wé'vl), n. A snout-beetle, Lisso- rhaphus sim- plex, which occurs in great numbers in the Georgia and South Carolina rice-fields, the adult feeding on the leaves of the rice, and the larvae feeding on the roots under water.

Water-weevil (Lisso-rhaphus simplex). Eight times natural size.

This beetle has gained its common name of water weevil from the fact that it is found only when the fields are overflowed.

L. O. Howard, U. S. Agricultural Report, 1881-2, p. 131.

water-wheel (wá'tér-hwél), n. In hydraul.:
(a) A wheel moved by water, and employed to turn machinery. There are four principal kinds of water-wheels, the overshot wheel, the undershot wheel, the breast-wheel, and the turbine. (b) A wheel for raising water in large quantities, as the Persian wheel. See wheel. (c) The paddle-wheel of a steamer.—Bottom-discharge water-wheel. See bottom.—Lift water-wheel. (a) An undershot wheel.
(b) A water-wheel the gudgeons and bearings of which may be raised or lowered to adapt the wheel to various heights of water-supply. E. H. Knight.—Radial-piston water-wheel, a form of breast-wheel having movable floats which extend radially outward to the breasting on the water side of the wheel to receive the pressure of the water during its descent, and are drawn inward as they rise on the opposite side of the wheel.—Water-wheel gate, a water-gate for controlling the quantity of water admitted to a wheel, according to the power required.
See cut under scroll.—Water-wheel governor, a mechanism employed to produce uniformity of motion in a water-wheel.

water-white (wá'tér-whít), a. Perfectly transparent, as water; limpid and colorless. Spous Encyc. Manuf., I, 646.

water-whorlgrass (wá'tér-hwér'l'grás), n.
Same as water-hairgrass.

water-willow (wá'tér-wí'ö), n. 1. A European willow, sometimes named Salix aquatica, forming a variety of the common willow, S. caprea, or if distinct, S. cinerea.—2. An American acanthaceous plant, Dianthera Americana, an herb 3 feet high, of willow-like aspect, growing in water, having purplish flowers in axillary peduncled spikes.

water-wing (wá'tér-wing), n. A wall erected on the bank of a river adjoining a bridge, to secure the foundations from the action of the current.

waterwitch (wá'tér-wích), n. 1. A witch who dwells in the water; a water-nixy.—2. A person who pretends to have the power of discovering subterranean springs by means of a divining-rod. Bartlett, Americanisms, p. 741.
—3. One of several water-birds noted for their quickness in diving, as a kind of duck, the buf-fe-headed duck, Clangula or Bucephala albeola, and especially various species of grebes or didappers, as the horned grebe, Podiceps cornu- water table (wá'tér-tá'bl), n. The surface of the ground water, or the level to which water rises in a well or cistern. See water-table.

water tank (wá'tér-tá'ng), n. A tank for water.
water tap (wá'tér-tá'p), n. A tap for water.
water target (wá'tér-tá'gét), n. A target for water.
water tath (wá'tér-tá'th), n. A tath for water.
water telescope (wá'tér-té'les-cóp), n. A telescope for water.
water thermometer (wá'tér-té'r-mí'tér), n. A thermometer for water.
water thief (wá'tér-tí'f), n. 1. A pirate.

2. A water thief, a water thief, a water thief.
[Local.]

3. A water thief, a water thief, a water thief.
[Local.]

4. A water thief, a water thief, a water thief.
[Local.]

water-thistle (wá'tér-thístl), n. The marsh-thistle, Scirpus palustris, of the northern Old World. Butten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]
water thrush (wá'tér-thrúsh), n. 1. A bird of the genus Scolecophagus, as S. natus or S. multi- coloratus, common in the United States, and belonging to the American warblers, or Mniotilt- idae. See water-thrush. 2. A bird of the genus Scolecophagus, as S. natus or S. multi-coloratus.
The name may have originally contrasted with the name of the bird, Scolecophagus, to a different family.
The name of the water thrush is a word and half of the name of the bird, Scolecophagus, the golden-throated bird, named after water-thrush, from which the name of the bird is derived. Also called water-thrush.
See water-thrush.

2. Any bird of the family Pittidae; an Old World ant-thrush. See cut under Pittidae.—
3. The water-thrush, Scirpus palustris. [Local, Eng.]—4. Same as water-wagtail, 1. [Local,
Eng.]

water-thyme (wá'tér-thím), n. See thyme.
water-tick (wá'tér-tík), n. A water-spider of the genus Hydrachna.

water-tiger (wá'tér-tí'gér), n. The larva of any water-beetle of the family Dytiscidae. See cut under water-beetle.

The water-tiger is a larva of a beetle, being long, cylindrical, with a brownish head, and with a greenish body, the head and thorax being dark, and the abdomen being green, and the legs being dark. They are found in water, and are very active, and are very common.

5. See water-tiger in the study of Insects, p. 10.
water-tight (wá'tér-tít), a. [= G. wasserdicht; water-tight]. So tight as to resist the passage of water; impervious to water. Watertight compartment. See water-tight and water- tightness.

water-tightness (wá'tér-tít'nes), n. The property of being water-tight. See water-tight.

water torch (wá'tér-tó'ch), n. The torch used in the water-torch, a torch used in the water-torch, and the torch used in the water-torch, and the torch used in the water-torch. See water-torch.
Plants.

water-tower (wá'tér-tó'wér), n. Same as water- tower.

water-treader (wá'tér-tréd'ér), n. One who or that which treads water; hence, by poetical usage, a water-treader.

The water-treader was already a water-treader by which London could communicate with the heart of England, no town save Oxford has as yet arisen along its course.

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 419.

tus, or the pied-billed dabchick, Podilymbus podiceps. See cuts under bugle, grebe, and Tachy-laptes.—4. The stormy petrel, or Mother Carey's chicken. See cut under petrel.

water-withe (wā'tēr-wīth), n. A species of vine, Vitis Caribaea, which grows in the West Indies in parched districts. It is so full of clear sap or water that a piece of the stem two or three yards long is said to afford a plentiful draught.

water-wood (wā'tēr-wūd), n. A large rubiaceous tree, Chimarrhis cymosa, of river-banks in the West Indies.

waterwork (wā'tēr-wérk), n. 1. A structure, contrivance, or engine for conducting, distributing, or otherwise disposing of water: now commonly in the plural. Specifically—(a) An edifice with machinery constructed in London in 1594–5 for forcing up and conveying the water of the Thames to various parts of the city.

Titus, the brave and valorous young gallant,
Three years together in the town hath been,
Yet my Lord Chancellor's tomb he hath not seen,
Nor the new waterwork.

Sir J. Davies (?), Epigrams (1596), vi., In Titum.

Mam. Shall serve the whole city with preservative Weekly; each house his dose, and, at the rate—
Sur. As he that built the waterwork doth with water.

B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.
(b) [In plural form, as sing. or pl.] The aggregate of constructions and appliances for the collection, preservation, and distribution of water for domestic purposes, for the working of machinery, or otherwise for the use of a community. (c) An appliance through which water is spouted out in jets, sprays, or showers; a fountain; a hydraulic toy.

Some [gardens] are beautified with basons of water in open pavilions, or with fountains and little water works, in which, and their pleasant summer houses, their chief beauty consists. Pooce, Description of the East, ii. i. 123.

(c) pl. Same as tear-pump. [Humorous slang.]
Sneaking little brute, . . . clapping on the waterworks just in the hardest place.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 5.
2t. A marine scene or pageant.

The first scene is a water-work presented by Oceanus, king of the sea.

Dekker, Londons Tempe (Works, ed. Pearson, IV. 118).
[In the following quotation the word is used punningly, with reference to the freezing over of the Thames during the winter of 1607–8.]

Coun. Make me so much beholding to you as to receive from you the right picture of all these your water works. . . .
Cit. The Thames began to put on his "freeze-coat," which he yet wears, about the week before Christmas; and hath kept it on till now this latter end of January.

The Great Frost (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 83.)

3t. Painting with water or something soluble in water as a vehicle.—4. Hence, a textile fabric, as canvas, painted in this manner, and used instead of tapestry to decorate apartments.

The king for himself had a house of timber, . . . and for his other lodgings he had great and goodlie tents of blew water-work, garnished with yellow and white.

Holinshed, Chronicle, III. 819.
For thy walls, a pretty slight drollery, . . . or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 158.

water-worker (wā'tēr-wér'kér), n. One whose work has to do with water; in provincial English use, a maker of meadow-drains and wet ditches. Halliwell.

water-worm (wā'tēr-wér'm), n. A water annelid, as a nauid.

water-worn (wā'tēr-wór'n), a. Worn by the action of water; especially, smoothed by the force or action of running water, or water in motion: as, water-worn pebbles.

waterwort (wā'tēr-wért), n. 1. A plant of the genus Elatine, or more broadly of the order Elatinaceæ, primarily E. Hydropiper of the Old World.—2. The plant Philydron lanuginosum, or (Lindley) any plant of the order Phylodraceæ.

water-wraith (wā'tēr-rāth), n. A supposed water-spirit, whose appearance prognosticates death or woe to the person seeing it.

By this the storm grew loud apace;
The water-wraith was shrieking.

Campbell, Lord Ullin's Daughter.

watery (wā'tēr-i), a. [ME. watery, watery, watry, watri, < AS. wæterig (= D. watrig = MHG. wezzeric, wazzeric, G. wässerig). < water, water: see water.] 1. Abounding in, moist with, or containing water; discharging water; wet; dripping; watered; specifically, of the eyes, tearful or running.

"After sharpe shoures," quod Pees, "moste shene is the sonne;
Is no weder warmer than after watery cloudes."

Piers Plouman (B), xviii. 410.

This lady

Walks discontented, with her watery eyes

Bent on the earth.

Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, i. 1.

2. Consisting of water.

The queen o' the sky,
Whose watery arch and messenger am I [Iris].
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 71.

Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth. Milton, P. L., ii. 584.

3. Resembling water; suggestive of water.
(a) Thin, as a liquid; of slight consistency.

Nowe this vynes, whose taketh kepe,
Not watery but thicke humours wepe.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 104.

Hence—(b) Weak; vapid; insipid.
The heorte, thet was watery, smecchles, and ne uedeled no sautur of god. Ancren Rible, p. 376.

Slight Sir Robert with his watery smile.
Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

(c) Liquid; soft, and more or less transparent; pale.

The chasm in which the sun has sunk is shut, . . .
And over it a space of watery blue,
Which the keen evening star is shining through.
Shelley, Evening.

Slant watery lights, from parting clouds, apace
Travel along the precipice's base.
Wordsworth, Evening Walk.

(d) Insipid and soft or flabby, as a fish or its flesh.

4. Pertaining to, connected with, or affecting water: specifically used of the moon, as governing the tide.

Whiles winter frets the seas, and wat'ry Orion.
Surrey, Æneid, iv. 67.

All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,
May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2. 69.

The watery god
Roll'd from a silver urn his crystal flood.
Dryden.

5t. Watering in desire, as the mouth; eager.

What will it be,
When that the watery palate tastes indeed Love's thrice repured nectar?

Shak., T. and C., iii. 2. 22.

6. In her: (a) Bounded by, or ornamented by, wavy lines: a rare epithet used in blazoning fanciful modern bearings. (b) Same as undé.

[Rare.]—The watery start. See start.—Watery fusion. See aqueous fusion, under fusion.—Watery itch, scabies attended with the formation of vesicles.

water-yam (wā'tēr-yām), n. The latticeleaf; either of the plants Apocynon (Oncandra) fenestralis and A. (O.) Bernieriana: so called from its aquatic growth and farinaceous root-stock. See latticeleaf and Oncandra.

water-yarrow (wā'tēr-yār'ō), n. The water-violet, Hottonia palustris: so called from its leaves being finely divided like those of yarrow. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

wath, n. [Icel. vadh = Sw. vad, a ford: see wade, n.] A ford. Halliwell.

wathe<sup>1</sup>, n. [ME. wahte (also, after Icel., waith, wayth), < AS. wæth, wæth, hunting, game, = OHG. weida, MHG. G. weide, pasture, meadow, = Icel. veidhr, hunting, fishing. Cf. gain<sup>1</sup>.] 1. The pursuit of game; hunting.

"ge, we ar in wudlond," cothe the king, "and walkes on owre wayth.
For to hunte atte the herd, with hounde and with horne."
Anturs of Arthur (ed. Robson), xxiv.

2. Game; prey.

Bi-fore alle the folk on the flette, frekez he beddez Verayly his veynysoun to fech hym byforn; . . .
"ge I-wysse," quoth that other wyze, "here is wayth fayrest

That I se; this seuen gere in sesoun of wynter."
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1381.

God send you som wathe!
Now ar thise fowles flone into seyr cuntries.
Towncley Mysteries, p. 33.

wathe<sup>2</sup>, n. [ME. wahte, wothe, < Icel. vāði, danger, injury.] Peril; harm; danger.

Trwe mon trwe restore,
Thenne thr [need] mon drede no wathe.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2355.

He vnwoundit, I-wis, out of wothe paste.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10696.

Ector done was to dethe, & his day past,
Achilles woundit full wathely in were of his lyffe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8827.

Wroghte wayes fulle wyde, werraynde knyghtez,
And wondes alle wathely, that in the waye stondez!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2090.

Watling street. [ME. Watlunge-strete, < AS. Wætlunga stræt, lit. the Watlings' street; Wætlunga, gen. pl. of Wætlung, a descendant of Wætla (< Wælla, a man's name, + -ing<sup>3</sup>); stræt, a road, street.] 1. A celebrated Roman road leading from London (and possibly from Dover) northward across Britain. Hence—2t. The Milky Way, the ordinary name of which implies that it is a road.

Se yonder, lo, the Galaxy,
The which men clepe the Milky Weye,
For hit ys white; and somme, parfeye,
Callen hyt Watlunge strete.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 939.

watt (wot), n. [So called from the Scottish engineer and inventor James Watt (1736–1819).] The practical unit of electrical activity or power. The watt is equal to 10<sup>7</sup> ergs per second, or the same number of absolute c. g. s. units of electrical activity; or it is the rate of working in a circuit when the E. M. F. is one volt and the current one ampere. One horse-power is equal to 746 watts.

watter, n. See wat<sup>3</sup>.

Watteau back. In dressmaking, an arrangement of the back of a woman's dress in which broad folds or plaits hang from the neck to the bottom of the skirt without interruption; by extension, any loose back to a dress, not girded at the waist. See cut under sack.

Watteau bodice. A bodice of a woman's dress having a square opening at the neck, and presenting some resemblance to the costumes in the paintings by the artist Watteau (beginning of the eighteenth century).

Watteau mantle. See mantle.

wattle (wot<sup>1</sup>), n. [Also dial. waddle; < ME. watel, < AS. watel, watul, a hurdle, in pl. twigs, thatching, tiles; cf. Bav. wadel, twigs, fir-branches, Swiss wedele, a bundle of twigs; perhaps akin to witky, weed<sup>1</sup>. Cf. wallet.] 1. A framework made of interwoven rods or twigs; a hurdle. See hurdle.

The walls are wattles, and the covering leaves.
Scott, The Poacher.

They are gallant hares, and the scent lies thick right across another meadow, . . . and then over a good wattle with a ditch on the other side.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 7.

2. A rod; a wand; a switch; a twig.

A Wattle, rod, vibex.
Levin's, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

Nae whip nor spur, but just a wattle
O' saugh or hazel.

Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

3t. A basket; a bag or wallet. Piers Plouman (C), xi. 269.—4. In ornith., a fleshy lobe hanging from the front of the head; specifically, such a lobe of the domestic hen, or a like formation of any bird. Wattles most properly so called are paired, as in the hen, but may be single, as the dewlap of the turkey. They are very various in size, shape, and color, but are usually pendent, and of some bright tint, as red, yellow, or blue. They occur in several different orders of birds, and among species whose near relatives are devoid of such appendages. Similar lobes or flaps on the auriculars are sometimes called ear-wattles, though more properly ear-lobes. See wattle-bird, wattle-croon, phrases under wattled, and cuts under Gallus and Rasores.

The combs or wattles [of young gamecocks] are to be cut as soon as they appear; and the cock chickens are to be separated as soon as they begin to peck each other.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 302.

5. A flap of skin forming a sort of dewlap on each side of the neck of some domestic swine.

Ye Wattle of a hog, neuus.
Levin's, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

Goitrons. Waddles, or wattles, the two little and long excrescences which hang teat-like at either side of the throat of some hogs. Cotgrave, 1611.

6. In ichth., a fleshy excrescence about the mouth; a barbel.

The Barbel is so called, says Gesner, by reason of his barb or wattles at his mouth, which are under his nose or chaps.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 166.

7. One of various Australian and Tasmanian acacias, valued to some extent for their wood and for their gum, but more for their bark, which is rich in tannin. For tannark the most important species are Acacia decurrens, or (if it is distinct from this, as appears to be the case) A. mollissima, the common black wattle, also called green or feathered wattle, and A. pycnantha, the broad-leaved or golden wattle. The silver wattle, A. dealbata, closely allied to the black wattle, is distinguished by the ashen color of its young foliage, and is a taller tree of moister ground. Its bark is inferior, but is considerably used for lighter leathers. Other species yielding tan-bark are A. saligna (A. leiophylla), the blackwood or lightwood, A. melanoxylon, the native hickory (A. suberosa), A. penninervis, etc. Several wattles yield a gum resembling gum arabic, somewhat exported for use in cotton-printing as an adhesive, etc. The principal sources of this product are the black wattle, the broad-leaved wattle, and A. homolophylla.

8. In her., a wattle or dewlap used in a bearing. Compare wattled.—African wattle, a South African tree, Acacia Natalitia.—Alpine wattle, Acacia pravissima, a shrub or small tree of the Victorian Alps.—Black wattle, feathered wattle, golden wattle, green wattle. See def. 7.—Prickly wattle, Acacia juniperina, an evergreen shrub of Australia and Tasmania.—Raspberry-jam wattle. Same as raspberry-jam tree.—Savannah wattle, two West Indian verbenaceous trees, Citharexylum quadrangulare and C. cinerea.—Silver wattle. See def. 7.—Soap-pod wattle. Same as soapnut, 2.—Varnish-wattle, the Australian Acacia verniciflua.—Wallaby wattle, an Australian shrub,

5. To signal by a wave of the hand, or of a flag, a handkerchief, or the like; direct by a waving gesture or other movement, as in beckoning.

We mistrusted some knavery, and, being waved by them to come a shore, yet we would not.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. ii. 33.

Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground.

Shakspeare, Hamlet, i. i. 61.

6. To express, as a command, direction, farewell, etc., by a waving movement or gesture.

Perchance the maiden smiled to see You parting lingerer wave adieu.

Scott, L. of the L., ii. 5.

I retained my station when he waved to me to go, and announced, "I can not think of leaving you, sir."

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

7. To water, as silk. See water, v. t., 3.

The waved water chamelot was from the beginning esteemed the richest and bravest wearing.

Holland, tr. of Pliny, viii. 48.

wave<sup>1</sup> (wāv), n. [ME. "ware, wave; < wave, v. The word wave in its most common sense has taken the place, in literary use, of the diff. noun uav, uauce, a wave. The form uauce could not, however, change into wave: see wawl. The noun uav, as well as the verb, has been confused with uauel. 1. A disturbance of the surface of a body in the form of a ridge and trough, propagated by forces tending to restore the surface to its figure of equilibrium, the particles not advancing with the wave.

No ship yit karf the waves grene and blew.

Chaucer, Former Age, l. 21.

When you do dance, I wish you

A wave of the sea, that you might ever do Nothing but that.

Shakspeare, W. T., iv. 4. 141.

2. Water; a stream; the sea. [Poetical.]

The laughing tides that lave

These Edens of the eastern wave.

Byron, The Giaour.

3. A form assumed by parts of a body which are out of equilibrium, such that as fast as the particles return they are replaced by others moving into neighboring positions of stress, so that the whole disturbance is continually propagated into new parts of the body while preserving more or less perfectly the same shape and other characters. In a somewhat wider sense the word is applied in cases where there is no progression through the body; thus, the shape of a vibrating piano-string may be called a wave. But in its narrowest and most proper sense it is restricted to an advancing elevation or depression of the surface of a body. An advancing elevation is called a positive wave, a depression a negative wave. Waves on the surfaces of liquids are distinguished into four orders. A wave of the first order, also called a wave of translation, leaves the particles, after its passage, shifted in the line of its motion. It is also called a solitary wave, because a single impulse produces but one elevation or depression, which has no definite length, but extends over the whole surface. The negative wave of this sort shortly breaks; it is only the positive wave, which leaves the particles in advance of their initial positions, which can be propagated far. This wave is also called Scott Russell's great wave, because it was first discovered by that engineer in 1834, and because, owing to its form, it cannot be seen unless it is very high. The velocity of such a wave is equal to  $\sqrt{g(h+E)}$ , where  $g$  is the acceleration of gravity,  $h$  the depth of the liquid in repose, and  $E$  the height of the crest of the wave above the plane of repose. This wave dies down of itself in a canal of uniform depth, independently of friction, and when it passes into shallow water it breaks as soon as  $h$  is no greater than  $k$ . A canal-boat produces such a wave, and consequently can be propelled at the rate of speed of the wave far more economically than at any other. In waves of the second order, called oscillatory waves, observation shows that each particle describes at a uniform rate of motion a circle in a vertical plane; but according to theory other orbits are possible. The particle at the crest of the wave is at the highest part of its path, that in the trough at the lowest. As long as the momentum of the particles is kept up, wave must succeed wave. If the water has a flow opposite to the direction of propagation of the waves and equal to it in velocity, it is plain that each particle will describe a prolate cycloid, and this is consequently the form of the waves. Waves thus brought to a standstill by the flow of the water are called standing waves. (See fig. 1.) They are often seen in rapidly running water.

Fig. 1. Standing waves in a torrent.

If the motion of the liquid is irrotational, theory shows that the waves cannot be cycloidal. But in regard to this whole subject neither theory nor observation can be trusted implicitly to give the truth of nature. The velocity of propagation of oscillatory waves, at least in deep water, is represented by the expression  $\sqrt{g\lambda/2\pi}$ , where  $\lambda$  is the length of the wave from crest to crest. But the velocity of propagation of a group of waves is much slower. Oscillatory waves break on a shelving shore when their height is about equal to the depth of the water, and from each one, as it breaks, a wave of the first order is produced. (See fig. 2.) Waves of the third order, called ripples, are distinguished from those of the second order in the fact that the shorter they are the more rapidly they move.

While an oscillatory wave 32 inches long will advance 3 feet per second, and one of 3 inches long only 1 foot per second, a ripple a quarter of an inch long will move 1 foot per second, a ripple an eighth of an inch long will move  $1\frac{1}{2}$  feet per second, and so on. The reason is that the force of restoration of the particles is here not chiefly gravity, but the surface-tension of the liquid. Ripples very rapidly die out. Waves of the fourth order are sound-waves. They are propagated in water at the rate of about 1,580 yards per second—that is, at a much greater speed than that of sound in air. In the case of sound propagated in the air, the waves are formed by the alternate forward and back motion of the air-particles in the direction in which the sound is being propagated; the waves are consequently waves of condensation and rarefaction, having in the free air a spherical form. The amplitude of vibration or excursion of each particle is very small, but the wave-length is large—for the middle C of the keyboard, about  $4\frac{1}{2}$  feet. A sound-wave travels in air about 1,100 feet per second. (See further under sound.) In the case of radiant energy (heat and light) propagated through the ether, the ether-particles vibrate transversely to the line of propagation; here the wave-length is very small—for violet light, about 0.000,016 of an inch, for red about twice this length, while the dark heat-waves, though much longer, are still very minute (see spectrum). A light-wave (or, more generally, an ether-wave) travels in space about 185,000 miles per second. Hertz has shown recently (1887) that by a very rapid oscillating electrical discharge, as between two knobs, a disturbance is produced in the surrounding ether which is propagated as electric waves with a velocity like that of light. These electric waves in Hertz's experiments were found to have a wave-length of upward of one meter. They are reflected from the surface of a conductor, but are transmitted by a non-conductor, as pitch, and may be brought to a focus; they may be made to interfere, then forming nodal points, and by passage through a grating of parallel wires they may be polarized. These electric waves are hence in all essential respects like light-waves, but differ in their relatively enormous length and the corresponding slowness of the oscillations. These experiments of Hertz form a most important confirmation of the electromagnetic theory of light proposed by Maxwell (see light).

That which in waves of fluid is rest is in waves of sound silence, and in waves of light darkness.

Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 220.

The reason why one end of the coloured band [spectrum] . . . is red and the other blue is that in light as in sound we have a system of disturbances or waves; we have long waves and short waves, and what the low notes are to music the blue waves are to light.

Herrick, Delight in Disorder.

The ears are furnished with feather to the same extent, with a slight wave, but no curl.

Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 107.

5. Figuratively, a flood, influx, or rush of anything, marked by unusual volume, extent, uprising, etc., and thus contrasted with preceding and following periods of the opposite character; something that swells like a sea-wave at recurring intervals; often, a period of intensity, activity, or important results: as, a wave of religious enthusiasm; waves of prosperity.

A light wind blew from the gates of the sun,

And waves of shadow went over the wheat.

Tennyson, The Poet's Song.

An emotional wave once roused tends to continue for a certain length of time. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 32.

Specifically—6. In meteor., a progressive oscillation of atmospheric pressure or temperature, or an advancing movement of large extent in which these are considerably above or below the normal: as, an air-wave, barometric wave, cold wave, warm wave, etc. The term barometric wave is often restricted to those changes in atmospheric pressure which are not connected with cyclonic disturbances nor with the regular diurnal variation, but which include progressive oscillations of a varied character and origin, ranging from those of a short wave-length, which occupy but a fraction of a minute in their passage, to those which cover thousands of miles and occupy several days in their development and subsidence. The remarkable air-waves generated by the eruption of Krakatoa are shown by barographic traces to have had an initial velocity of 700 miles an hour, and to have traveled round the earth not less than seven times.

7. A waved or wavy line of color or texture; an undulation; specifically, the undulating line or streak of luster on cloth watered and calendered.—8. A waving; a gesture, or a signal given by waving.

With clear-rustling wave

The scented pines of Switzerland

9. A book-name of certain geometrid moths. Thus, Acidalia rubricata is the tawny wave; A. contiguaris is Greening's wave; Pennisia ambrosaria is the Welsh wave, etc.—Barometric wave. See def. 6.—Cold wave, a progressive movement of an area of relatively low temperature. It is preceded by an area of low pressure, and is, in the United States, directly associated with the north-westerly winds which follow a cyclonic depression and accompany the advance of an area of high barometer. The cold wave is, in the United States, in most cases an out-pour of cold dry air from the barren plains of British America, where the air is cooled during the long nights of winter to a very low temperature. In Texas and the Gulf of Mexico the cold wave is termed a norther. The approach of cold waves is made a subject of forecast by the United States Weather Bureau. (See under signal.) A decided fall of temperature of less extent, such as frequently occurs in other than winter months, is termed a cold wave. [U. S.]

When the fall of temperature in twenty-four hours is twenty degrees or more, and covers an area of at least fifty thousand square miles, and the temperature in any part of the area goes as low as 36°, it is called a cold-wave. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XL. 463.

Dicrotic wave. See dicrotic.—Hot wave, warm wave, a progressive movement, generally eastward, of an area of relatively high temperature, but without so definite a boundary and character as distinguish a cold wave. The general conditions of a warm wave, or heated term, in summer are pressure decreasing to the northward, southerly winds, fair or hazy weather, with practically unbroken insulation, and, in some cases, such an amount of vapor in the air as to diminish the usual nocturnal radiation. [U. S.]

—Length of a wave, or wave-length, the distance between any two particles which are in the same phase.

Period of a wave, the time between the passage of successive crests, or between successive extreme displacements of a particle in the same manner.—Predicrotic wave. See predicrotic.—Smoky wave. See smoky.—Storm-wave.

(a) A sea-wave raised at the center of a cyclonic storm by the low atmospheric pressure and the force of the winds. It advances with the progressive motion of the storm, and has all the properties of a true wave. When augmented by a heavy fall of rain, and blown by strong winds upon a low shore, the storm-wave causes disastrous inundations. The thickly populated low-lands at the head of the Bay of Bengal have been the scene of frequent storm-floods, occasioning enormous losses of life and property. (b) In general, on sea-coasts, the increased wave-motion accompanying storms.—Subangled wave, a British geometrid moth, Acidalia strigularia.—Tidal wave. See tidal.—Type of a wave. See type.—Warm wave. Wave of translation. See def. 3. (See also brain-wave, pulse-wave.)—Syn. 1. Wave, Billow, Surge, Breaker, Surf, Swell, Ripple. Wave is the general word. A billow is a great round and rolling wave. Surge is only a somewhat stronger word for billow. A breaker is a wave breaking or about to break upon the shore or upon rocks. Surf is the collective name for breakers: as, to bathe in the surf; it is sometimes popularly used for the foam at the edge or crest of the breaker. Swell is the name for the wave rising (and falling) of water, especially after the wind has subsided, or for the water that so rises (and falls), or for any particular and occasional disturbance of water by such rising (and falling): as, the boat was swamped by the swell from the steamer. Ripple is the name for the smallest kind of wave.

The high watery walls came rolling in, and at their highest tumbled into surf. . . . Some white-headed billows thundered on. . . . The breakers rose, and, looking over one another, bore one another down, and rolled in, in interminable hosts. . . . The sea . . . carried men, spars, . . . into the boiling surge.

Dickens, David Copperfield, lv.

This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon.

A thick, sticky substance secreted by bees, and used to build their cells; the material of honeycomb; beeswax. In its natural state it is of a dull-yellow color, and smells of honey. Its consistency varies with the temperature; it is ordinarily a pliable solid, readily melted. When purified and bleached, it becomes translucent white, is less tenacious, without taste or smell, and of a specific gravity a little less than that of water. It softens at 50° F., becoming extremely plastic, and retaining any form in which it may be molded, like clay or putty, and melts at 158° F. In chemical composition, wax consists of variable proportions of three substances, called myrcin, cerolin, and cerotic acid. Wax is used for many purposes, both in its natural state and variously prepared. As bleached, and also then variously tinted, it is made into wax candles, which give a peculiarly soft light. In pharmacy it enters into the composition of various plasters, ointments, and cerates, as a vehicle for the active ingredients, and to confer upon the preparation a desired consistency. It has varied uses in the plastic arts, especially in the making of anatomical models, artificial flowers and fruits, casts and impressions of various kinds, etc.

2. One of various substances and products resembling beeswax in appearance, consistency, plasticity, and the like, or used for like purposes. (a) The substance worked up from the pollen of flowers by the hind legs of bees, and used to feed their larvae; bee-bread, formerly supposed to be beeswax. (b) The substance secreted by various coccids or wax-scales, especially such as has commercial value. (See wax-insect, 1.) (c) The product of some other homopterous insects. (See wax-insect, 2.) This is more or less stringy and flocculent, and approaches in character the froth or spume of the spittle-insects, but in some cases is usable like beeswax. (d) The secretion of the sebaceous glands of the outer ear; cerumen; ear-wax. (e) A vegetable product which may be regarded as a concrete fixed oil, the principal varieties being Chinese wax, cow-tree wax, carnauba wax, and Japan wax. It may be obtained from the pollen of many flowers, and it forms a part of the green fecula of many plants, particularly of the cabbage. It appears as a varnish upon the fruit or the upper surface of the leaves of many trees, as the wax-palm and wax-myrtle. Also called vegetable wax. See under Myrica. See also wax-tree, and compounds below. (f) A mineral product, one of certain fossil hydrocarbons which occur in small quantities generally in the Carboniferous formation: called more fully mineral wax. The most familiarly known variety is ozocerite. (g) A substance used for sealing. See sealing-wax.

Quomodo. He will never trust his land in wax and parchment, as many gentlemen have done before him.

wax-berry (waks'ber'i), n. The bayberry, Myrica cerifera.

waxbill (waks'bil), n. One of numerous small Old World birds of the family Ploceidae and subfamily Spermestinae, whose bills have a certain waxen appearance, due to the translucency of the horny covering, which may be white, pink, red, etc. The name appears to have attached more particularly to the members of the genus Estrilda in a broad sense, but is of extensive and varied application. The Java sparrow is a good example. (See under sparrow.) The original waxbill, first so named by Edwards in 1751, the waxbill grosbeak of Latham (1783), Loxia astrild of Linnaeus, and now Estrilda astrild, or Estrilda astrild, (for the name thus wavers in spelling), is a South African bird, ranging as far as Matabeleland on the east and Damaraland on the west coast. It has also been introduced in various places, and is a well-known cage-bird. It is scarcely over 4 inches long, the wing and tail each about 1½ inches; the bill is bright-red; the eyes and feet are brown. The general aspect is that of a brown bird, but this ground-color is intricately varied with several other colors. The vent is black, and there is a crimson streak on each side of the head. The blue-breasted waxbill (E. cyanogastra), the orange-cheeked (E. melpoda), the red-bellied (E. rubricincta), the grenadier (E. granatina), and various others are among the small exotic birds which form the dealer's stock of amadavats, senegals, blood-finches, strawberry-finches, paddy-birds, and the like.

Waxbill (Estrilda astrild).

wax-bush (waks'bush), n. Same as wax-weed.

wax-chandler (waks'chand'ler), n. A maker or seller of wax candles. [Eng.]

wax-cloth (waks'klōth), n. A popular name for floor-cloth. [Eng.]

wax-cluster (waks'klus'ter), n. A shrub, Gaultheria hispida, found in the mountains of Australia and Tasmania. It grows 2 or 3 feet high or more, and is conspicuous for its abundant and beautiful white waxy berry-like fruit.

wax-doll (waks'dol'), n. 1. A child's doll of which the head and bust are made of beeswax combined with other ingredients to give it hardness.—2. pl. The common fumitory, Fumaria officinalis; so called from the texture and color of its white or flesh-colored flowers. Britten and Holland. (b) To follow one's own plan, opinion, inclination, or fancy.

Doctor, your service for this time is ended; Take your own way.

Shak., Cymbeline, i. 5. 31.

Under way, in progress; in motion: said of a vessel that has weighed her anchor or has left her moorings and is making progress through the water; hence, generally, making progress; having started: often erroneously writ-the person is full of self-will, which asserts itself against those whose wishes ought to be deferred to or whose commands should be obeyed. Contrary and unward express the same idea, the one in a positive, the other in a negative form. Contrary is an energetic word, expressing the idea that one takes, or is disposed to take, the course exactly opposite to that which he is expected or desired to take. Contrariness, when ingrained, becomes perverseness; as, a contrary disposition; a contrary fellow. This use of contrary is by many considered colloquial, but has the recommendation of figurative force. Contrary and unward view the person as one to be managed; unward views the person also as the object of mental or moral discipline: this perhaps through its use in Acts ii. 40. An unward person is not responsive to persuasion, advice, influence, or requests; unward circumstances are similarly such as do not help us in our plans. All these words imply that the only consistency in the person's conduct is in this self-willed independence of others' wishes or opposition to them, but unward implies it least. See perverseness.

way-warden (wā'wār'dn), n. A keeper or surveyor of roads.

Woodcutler. Hadst best repent and mend thy ways.
Peasant. The way-warden may do that; I wear out no ways; I go across country.

Kingsley, Saint's Tragedy, ii. 6.

waywardly (wā'wārd-lī), adv. In a wayward manner; frowardly; perversely.

waywardness (wā'wārd-nēs), n. [< ME. weiwardnesse, perverseness; < wayward + -ness.] The character of being wayward; frowardness; perverseness.

The unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.
Shak., Lear, i. 1. 302.

waywise (wā'wīz), a. [< way<sup>1</sup> + wise<sup>1</sup>. Cf. way-witty; see also waywiser.] Expert in finding or keeping the way; knowing the way or route. Ash.

waywiser (wā'wīz-ēr), n. [= D. wegwijzer, a guide, = G. wegweiser, a way-mark, guide, = Sw. vägvisare = Dan. vejviser, a guide, a directory; as *way<sup>1</sup> + *wiser*, shower, indicator, < wise<sup>3</sup>, point out, show, + -er<sup>1</sup>.] An instrument for measuring the distance which a wheel rolls over a road; an odometer or perambulator.

I went to see Colonel Blount, who showed me the application of the way-wiser to a coach, exactly measuring the miles, and showing them by an index as we went on. It had three circles, one pointing to the number of rods, another to the miles, by 10 to 1000, with all the subdivisions of quarters.
Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 6, 1657.

way-witty, a. [ME. weicitti; < way<sup>1</sup> + witty. Cf. waywise.] Same as waywise.

waywode, waywodeship. Same as voivode, voivodship.

A way-worn traveller. Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 2.

waywort (wā'wōrt), n. The pimpernel, Anagallis arvensis. [Prov. Eng.]

wayz-goose, n. [An erroneous spelling of **weise-gaose*, < waise.] 1. A stubble-goose; hence, a fat goose—that is, one ready to kill in harvest-time.—2. An entertainment given by an apprentice to his fellow-workmen, of which the goose was the crowning dish; hence, in recent times, a printers' annual dinner, the funds for which are collected by stewards regularly appointed by "the chapel."

we (wē), pron.; pl. of I<sup>2</sup>. [Early mod. E. also wee; < ME. we, < AS. wē = OS. wī = OFries. wī = D. wij = OHG. MHG. G. wir = Icel. vēr, vēr = Sw. Dan. vi = Goth. weis, *< Teut. *wiz*, **wis*, with appar. nom. suffix -s, prob. = Skt. vayam, we. The L. and Gr. forms are different; L. nos, pl. (including dual), = Gr. vō, dual; Gr. hēis, we, appar. belonging to the stem of ἐπεί, etc., me (see me<sup>1</sup>). In AS. wē had a dual, wit, which disappeared in the earliest ME. period. See I<sup>2</sup>, me<sup>1</sup>, our, and us.] I and another or others; I and he or she, or I and they: a personal pronoun, taking the possessive our or ours (see our<sup>1</sup>) and the objective (dative or accusative) us.

Go we now on goddess halue.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), i. 2803.

How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.

Shak., K. John, v. 3. 1.

On the left hand left we two little Islands.

Sandys, Travels, p. 8.

It may be that the gulfs will wash us down;

It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,

And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.

Tennyson, Ulysses.

We is sometimes, like they, vaguely used for society, people in general, the world, etc.; but when the speaker or writer uses we, he identifies himself more or less directly with the statement; when he uses they he implies no such identification. Both pronouns thus used may be translated by the French on and the German man: as, we (or they) say, French on dit, German man sagt.

Yet seen too oft, familiar with her [vice's] face,

We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 220.

The instances in which our feelings bias us in spite of ourselves are of hourly recurrence.

H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 196.

Many tongues have a double first person plural, one inclusive and one exclusive of the person or persons addressed: one we which means 'I and my party,' as opposed to you; and one that means 'my party and yours,' as opposed to all third persons.

Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 219.

We is frequently used by individuals, as editors and authors, when alluding to themselves, in order to avoid the appearance of egotism which it is assumed would result from the frequent use of the pronoun I. The plural style is used also by kings and other potentates, and is said to have been first used in his edicts by King John of England; according to others, by Richard I. The French and German sovereigns followed the example about the beginning of the thirteenth century.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourselves,

To hold your slaughtering hands.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 86.

We and us are sometimes misused for each other.

To poor we

Thine enmity's most capital.

Shak., Cor., v. 3. 103.

Nay, no compliment: . . . Shall 't to dinner, gentlemen?

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

Our bodies themselves, are they simply ours, or are they us?

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., i. 291.

We-us (literally, we ones), we or us. [Dialectal, southern U. S.]

"Grind some fur we-us ter-morrer?" asked Ab. "I'll grind yer bones, ef ye'll send 'em down," said Amos.

M. N. Murfree, Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains, ix.

weabit, n. See way-bit.

weak (wēk), a. [< ME. weak, weyk, waik, wayk, weaponry (wep'ŋn-ri), n. [< weapon + -ry (see -ery).] Weapons in general. [Rare.]

weapon-salve (wep'ŋn-sāv), n. A salve which was supposed to cure a wound by being applied to the weapon that made it. According to Sir Kenelm Digby, the salve produces sympathy between the wound and the weapon; he cites several instances to prove that "as the sword is treated the wound inflicted by it feels. Thus, if the instrument is kept wet, the wound will feel cool; if held to the fire, it will feel hot," etc. This superstition is referred to in the following lines:

She has ta'en the broken lance,

And washed it from the clotted gore,

And saved the splinter o'er and o'er.

Scott, L. of L. M., iii. 23.

weapon-smith (wep'ŋn-smith), n. One who makes weapons of war; an armorer. [Rare.]

It is unavoidable that the first mechanics—beyond the herical weapon-smith on the one hand, and on the other the poor professors of such rude arts as the homestead cannot do without— . . . should be those who have no land.

wearisome (or fatiguing) to speak and to be spoken to. Wearisome is more often used where one is acted upon; in strength it is the same as wearysome. Wearisome is stronger than wearysome, and suggests the need of constant effort of the will to do or to endure; the wearisomeness may be physical or mental; as, a wearisome task; a wearisome headache; wearisome gravity. Wearisome suggests commonly that one is acted upon; irksome suggests that one acts or is called upon to act, and implies also a peculiar reluctance. In Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 56, is an example of the rarer use of irksome to express a wearied shrinking from being acted upon: "How irksome is this music to my heart!" See fatigue, n., and tired, v.

wearisomely (wēr'i-sum-lī), adv. In a wearisome manner; tedious; so as to cause weariness.

Pope's epigrammatic cast of thought led him to spend his skill on bringing to a nicer adjustment the balance of the couplet, in which he succeeded only too wearisomely well. Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 156.

wearisomeness (wēr'i-sum-nēs), n. The quality or state of being wearisome; tiresomeness; tediousness; as, the wearisomeness of waiting long and anxiously.

That the wearisomeness of the Sea may be refreshed in this pleasing part of the Country.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 6.

Continual plodding and wearisomeness.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

It would be difficult to realize the wearisomeness which reigned in the Conclave during so protracted a period.

J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, xxx.

wear-plate (wēr'plāt), n. Same as wear-iron.

weary<sup>1</sup> (wēr'i), a. [< ME. weary, weir, < AS. wērig = OS. wōrig (in comp.), weary, = OHG. worag, wharag, drunken. Cf. AS. wōs, also wās, mire, wet, ooze; see wase<sup>2</sup>, woose, ooze.] 1. Tired; exhausted by toil or exertion; having the endurance or patience worn out by continuous striving.

There here is the place where that our Lord rested him, when he was weary for beryng of the Cross.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 80.

Estern tewesday to Suza to Diner, and the I rest me; for I was weary, and my hors also, for the grett labor that I had the same mornyn in passing over the evyll and grevous mounte Sepus.

Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 3.

Let us not be weary in well doing.

Gal. vi. 9.

When they will they work, and sleep when they are weary.

Sandys, Travels, p. 14.

I see you are weary, and therefore I will presently wait on you to your chamber.

Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 235.

The stag-hounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretched upon the rushy floor.

Scott, L. of L. M., i. 2.

2. Impatient of or discontented with the continuance of something painful, exacting, irksome, or distasteful, and willing to be done with it; having ceased to feel pleasure (in something).

In the exercise and study of the mind they be never weary.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves.

Shak., Venus and Adonis, I. 1189.

I think she is weary of your tyranny,
And therefore gone.

Fletcher, Pilgrim, ii. 1.

He is weary of the old wooden houses, the mud and dust, the dead level of site and sentiment, the chill east wind, and the chilliest of social atmospheres.

Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 11.

3. Causing fatigue; tiresome; irksome: as, a weary journey; a weary life.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable Seem to me all the uses of this world!

Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 133.

Their dusty palfreys and array Showed they had marched a weary way.

Scott, Marmion, i.

Most weary seem'd the sea, weary the oar,
Weary the wandering fields of barren foam.

Tennyson, Lotus-Eaters.

The people shall weary themselves for very vanity.

Hab. ii. 13.

They in the practice of their religion weari<sup>ed</sup> chiefly their knees and hands, we especially our ears and tongues.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

2. To exhaust the endurance, patience, or resistance of, as by persistence or importunity.

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 9.

I have even weari<sup>ed</sup> heaven with prayers.

Ford, 'Tis Pity, i. 3.

Watchful I'll guard thee, and with Midnight Pray'r
Weary the Gods to keep thee in their Care.

Prior, Henry and Emma.

To weary out. (a) To exhaust or subdue by something fatiguing or irksome.

Like an Egyptian Tyrant, some Thou weari<sup>est</sup> out in building but a Tomb.

Cowley, The Mistress, Thraldom.

She surceased not, day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd and weari<sup>ed</sup> out.

Milton, S. A., I. 405.

(b) To pass wearily. [Rare.]

The land of Italy:

There wil I waile, and weary out my dayes in wo.

The Merchant's Daughter (Child's Ballads, IV. 329).

= Syn. 1. Fatigue, Jade, etc. See tired.

II. intrans. 1. To become weary, tired, or fatigued.

She was nae ten miles frae the town,
When she began to weary.

Lizae Baillie (Child's Ballads, IV. 74).

2. To become impatient or surfeited, as with the continuance of something that is monotonous, irksome, or distasteful.

Sing the simple passage o'er and o'er
For all an April morning, till the ear
Weari<sup>es</sup> to hear it.

Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. To long; languish: with for before the object.

The pair took home schoolboy meals in paper-bags, subsisting upon buns and canned meats, and wearying for the taste of a hot broiled steak. The Century, XXXVII. 775.

weary<sup>2</sup> (wēr'i), n. [< **weary*<sup>2</sup>, v., var. of wary<sup>2</sup>, curse: see wary<sup>2</sup>.] A curse: used now only in the phrases Weary in' you! Weary on you! and the like. Scotch. [Scotch.]

weasand (wē'zānd), n. [Also weazand, and formerly weasand, weasand, also dial. wæzen, wizen, wizen, and wosen: < ME. wesand, wesande, waysande, weasunt, < AS. wāsend, also wāsend (> E. dial. wosen) = OFries. wāsende, wāsende, weasand, windpipe, = OHG. wēisunt, MHG. wēisunt (E. Müller), weasand; cf. G. dial. (Bav.) waisel, wasel, wasing, the gullet of ruminating animals. The word (AS. wāsend) has the form of a present participle, and some have attempted to connect it with weeze; this involves the assumption that the rare AS. verb hwēsan (pret. hwēbs), weeze, = Icel. hwæsa, hiss, = Dan. hwæse, hiss, weeze (not found in OHG., etc.), gave rise to a noun **hwēsend*, varying to **hwāsend*, **hwāsend*, meaning 'the wheezing thing,' that this name was applied to all windpipes (most of which never wheeze), and that subsequently the initial consonant in hw- fell away, a phenomenon wholly unknown in other AS. words in hw-, and not recognized even in mod. English except in dialectal use.] The windpipe; the pipe or tube through which air passes to and from the lungs in respiration; the trachea. See trachea<sup>1</sup> and larynx.

Should I have named him? Nay, they should as soon have this weasand of mine.

weasel-coot (wē'zī-kōt), n. The so-called red-headed smew. This is the female or young male of Mergellus albellus (the adult male of which is figured under smew). The implication of the term weasel appears to be the musteline or foxy color of the head. An old name of this or a similar merganser was Mergus mustelinus, and one used by Sir T. Browne was Mustela variegata. The same adjective with the same meaning occurs in Turdus mustelinus, the present name of the wood-thrush of the United States, and in several other specific designations of animals, as in Lepilemur mustelinus, the weasellemur. Compare weaser.

weasel-duck (wē'zī-duk), n. Same as weasel-coot.

weasel-faced (wē'zī-fāst), a. Having a thin, sharp face like a weasel's. Steele.

weasel-fish (wē'zī-fish), n. The three-bearded rockling, or whistle-fish. See whistle-fish.

weasel-lemur (wē'zī-lēm'r), n. A small lemur, Lepilemur mustelinus.

weaselling, n. [Also weazelling; < weasel + ling.] A kind of rockling, probably the five-bearded, Motella mustela.

weaselmonger (wē'zī-mung'gēr), n. A rat-catcher; one who hunts rats, etc., with weasels.

This weaselmonger, who is no better than a cat in a house, or a ferret in a conyatz [rabbit-burrow].

Peele, Speeches to Queen Elizabeth at Theobalds, ii.

 a purpose against opposition.—To weather out, to hold out against to the end.

When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
 And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us.

Addison, Cato, iii, 2.

II. intrans. 1. To suffer a change, such as discoloration or more or less complete disintegration, in consequence of exposure to the weather or atmosphere. See weathering, 2.

The lowest bed is a sandstone with ferruginous veins;
 it weathers into an extraordinary honey-combed mass.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, ii, 426.

The granite commenced to weather, and weathered merrily on in spite of all technical and scientific commissions.
Seiner, VII, 75.

2. To resist or bear exposure to the weather.

For outside work, boiled oil is used, because it weathers better than raw oil. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 436.

weather-beaten (weth'ér-bē'tn), a. [weather + beaten. In some of its uses perhaps a perverted spelling of weather-bitten, q. v.] Beaten or marred by the weather; seasoned or hardened by exposure to all kinds of weather: as, a weather-beaten sailor.

She enjoys sure peace for evermore,
 As weather-beaten ship arry'd on happy shore.

Spenser, F. Q., II, i, 2.

Summer being ended, all things stand in appearance with a weather-beaten face.

A. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 35.

The weather-beaten form of the scout.

J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxiv.

weather-bitt (weth'ér-bit), v. t. To take an
 ... he bitts or the or wall, lapping one over another, in order to turn off rain, snow, etc.

It was a building of four rooms, constructed of hewn logs and weather-boarded at the joints.

The Century, XXXVIII, 408.

weather-boarding (weth'ér-bōr-ding), n. 1.
 A facing of thin boards, having usually a weather- edge, and nailed lapping one over another, used as an outside covering for the walls of a wooden building. They are practically the same as clapboards, but are distinguished from those by being larger and wider.—2. The finish or woodwork at the base of a clapboarded wall.—3. The whole exterior covering of a wall or roof, whether of weather-boards, clapboards, or shingles.—Weather-boarding clamp, gauge, saw, etc., special forms of clamp, gauge, saw, etc., used in applying or cutting out weather-boarding.

weather-bound (weth'ér-bound), a. Delayed by bad weather.

weather-box (weth'ér-boks), n. A form of hygroscope, in the shape of a toy-house, which roughly indicates weather changes by the appearance or retirement of toy images. In a common form a man advances from his porch in wet and a woman in dry weather—the movement being produced by the varying torsion of a hygroscopic string by which the images are attached. Also called weather-house.

The elder and younger son of the house of Crawley were, like the gentleman and lady in the weather-box, never at home together.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, x.

weather-breeder (weth'ér-brē-dēr), n. A fine serene day which precedes and prepares a storm.

"It's a beautiful day," said Whittaker. . . . "Yes, nice day," growled Adams, "but a weather-breeder."

E. Eggleston, Roxy, xiii.

weather-cast (weth'ér-kást), n. A forecast of the weather. [Rare.]

Admiral FitzRoy, in 1860, was enabled, aided by the electric telegraph, to inaugurate a system of storm-warnings and weather-casts.

R. Strachan, in Modern Meteorology, p. 84.

weather-caster (weth'ér-kás'tēr), n. One who computes the weather for almanacs. [Hal- livell.]

weather-cloth (weth'ér-klôth), n. Naut.: (a) A covering of painted canvas for hammocks, boats, etc. (b) A tarpaulin placed in the weather- rigging to make a shelter for officers and men on watch.

weathercock (weth'ér-kok), n. [< ME. weder- cock, weddyroke, weddyroke, wedercon, so called because the figure of a cock, as an emblem of vigilance, has from a very early time been a favorite form for vanes; cf. D. weerhaan = Sw.
väderhane = Dan. værhane, a weathercock, etc.
 (D. haan, etc., a cock).] 1. A vane or weather- vane: a pointing device, set on the top of a spire or other elevation, and turning with the wind, thus showing its direction. See cut un- der cane.

O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
 As a nose on a man's face, or a weather-cock on a steeple!

Shak., T. G. of V., ii, 1, 142.

They are Men whose Conditions are subject to more Revolutions than a Weather Cock, or the Uncertain Mind of a Fantastical Woman.

Ward, London Spy.

His head . . . looked like a weather-cock, perched upon his spindle neck to tell which way the wind blew.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 420.

2. Figuratively, any thing or person that is easily and frequently turned or swayed; a fickle or inconstant person.

What pretty weathercocks these women are!

Randolph, Anytas, i, 1.

The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
 Not like the king's, that weather-cock of state.

Dryden, Conquest of Granada, I, iii, 1.

weathercock (weth'ér-kok), v. t. [< weather- cock, n.] To serve as a weathercock to or on.
 [Rare.]

Whose blazing wyvern weathercock'd the spire.

Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

weather-contact (weth'ér-kon'takt), n. In teleg., leakage to neighboring wires or to earth, due to wet insulators.

weather-cross (weth'ér-krôs), n. In telegraph-and telephone-lines, a leakage from one line to another, caused by poor insulation, and brought about by wet or stormy weather.

weather-dog (weth'ér-dog), n. A fragmentary rainbow, popularly believed, especially in Cornwall, to be an indication of rain. [Prov. Eng.]

weather-driven (weth'ér-driv'n), a. [= Sw. vä- der-driven, wind-driven; as weather + driven.]
 1. Driven by winds or storms; forced by stress of weather.

weathered (weth'érd), p. a. 1. Discolored or of disintegrated by the action of the elements:

said sometimes of surfaces of wood, but oftener of stones or rocks. Trees which show signs of having suffered from exposure to the weather, as many old ones do, are sometimes said to be weather-bitten, but rarely, if ever, to be weathered. See weather-rot, 2.

The bands of stratification . . . can be distinguished in many places, especially in Navarin Island, but only on the weathered surfaces of the slate.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, i. 448.

The force of the wind is such as actually to loosen the weathered parts of the rock and dislodge them.

Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii.

2. Seasoned by exposure to the air or the weather.—3. In arch., having a slope or inclination to prevent the lodgment of water: noting surfaces approximately or theoretically horizontal, as those of window-sills, the tops of cornices, and the upper surface of flat stone-work.

weather-eye (weTH'ér-ē), n. The eye imagined to be specially used for the purpose of observing the sky in order to forecast the weather.—To keep one's weather-eye open or awake, to be on one's guard; have one's wits about one. [Colloq.]

Keep your weather-eye awake, and don't make any more acquaintances, however handsome.

Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, ii. 5.

weather-fend (weTH'ér-fend), v. t. [< weather + fend.] To shelter; defend from the weather. [Rare.]

The line grove which weather-fends your cell.

Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 10.

weather-fish (weTH'ér-fish), n. The mud-fish, thunder-fish, or misgurn of Europe, Misgurnus fossilis: regarded as a weather-prophet because it is supposed to come out of the mud, in which it habitually burrows, before a storm.

weather-gage (weTH'ér-gāj), n. 1. Naut., the advantage of the wind; the position of a ship when she is to windward of another ship: opposed to lee-gage.

A ship is said to have the weather-gage of another when she is at the windward of her.

Admiral Smyth.

Hence—2. Advantage of position; the upper hand.

Were the line
Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
I gain the weather-gage of fate!

Scott, Rokeby, vi. 24.

To dispute the weather-gage. See dispute.

weather-gall (weTH'ér-gal), n. Same as water-gall, 2.

weather-glass (weTH'ér-glās), n. [= D. weerglas = Sw. väderglas = Dan. veerglas, barometer; as weather + glass.] An instrument designed to indicate the state of the atmosphere. This word is commonly applied to the barometer, but also to other instruments for measuring atmospheric changes and indicating the state of the weather, as the thermometer and various kinds of hygrometers.

The King of Spain's health is the Weather-glass upon which all our politicians look; as that rises or falls, we look pleasant or uneasy.

Prior (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 265).

Shepherd's or poor man's weather-glass. See shepherd.

weather-gleam (weTH'ér-glēm), n. A peculiar appearance of clear sky near the horizon. [Prov. Eng.]

You have marked the lightning of the sky just above the horizon when clouds are about to break up and disappear. Whatever name you gave it, you would hardly improve on that of the weather-gleam, which in some of our dialects it bears.

Trench. (Imp. Dict.)

weather-hardened (weTH'ér-här'dnd), a. Hardened by the weather; weather-beaten.

A countenance which, weather-hardened as it was, might have given the painter a model for a Patriarch.

Southey, The Doctor, ix.

weather-head (weTH'ér-hed), n. 1. A secondary rainbow. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Stripes of cirrus cloud. [Scotch.]

weather-headed (weTH'ér-hed'ed), a. Same as weather-headed.

Sir, is this usage for your son?—for that old weather-headed fool, I know how to laugh at him; but you, Sir—

Congreve, Love for Love, ii. 7. (Davies.)

weather-house (weTH'ér-hous), n. Same as weather-box. Cropper, Task, i. 211.

weathering (weTH'ér-ing), n. [< ME. wederyng; verbal n. of weather, v.] 1. Weather, especially favorable or fair weather.

For alle trewe shippmen, and trewe pilgrymes, yat Godd for his grace yeue hem wederyng and passage, yat yei mowen sauely commen and gone.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

Which would have bene, with the weathering which we had, ten or twelve dayes worke.

Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 515.

2. In geol., etc., the action of the elements in changing the color, texture, or composition of rock, in rounding off its edges, or gradually disintegrating it. The first effect of the weathering of rock-surfaces is discoloration. This arises in part from dust or dirt finding its way into the fissures, and is most quickly seen in large cities where much coal is burned. Discoloration often arises from the oxidation of some sulphur compound which the rock contains, and especially of iron pyrites, which is a widely disseminated mineral. Another very perceptible effect of weathering is the loss of the luster which many rock-constituents naturally have. This is particularly conspicuous in the case of feldspar, and is the result of incipient decomposition and hydration. Rounding of the edges of angular projections of the rock, or of its constituents, is another result of weathering, the decomposed minerals being more easily removed by the action of water than they were before decomposition. Weathering is a preliminary to erosion, but the rapidity with which these operations are carried on varies greatly with the nature of the rock and the climatic and other conditions to which it is subjected.

Many of them (modules of various kinds) are, also, externally marked in the same direction with parallel ridges and furrows, which have not been produced by weathering.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, i. 75.

3. In arch., a slight inclination given to an approximately horizontal surface to enable it to throw off water.

weathering-stock (weTH'ér-ing-stok), n. A post to which hawks are leashed in such a manner as to allow them limited exercise. See last quotation under weather, v. t., 1.

E'en like the hawk (whose keeper's wary hands Have made a pris'ner to her weather-ring stock).

Quarles, Emblems, v. ix. 5.

weatherliness (weTH'ér-li-nes), n. 1. Weatherly character or qualities: said of ships and boats.

To combine the speed of the ordinary type of American sloop with the weatherliness of the English cutter.

Science, VI. 168.

2. Naut., the state of a vessel as to her capacity to ply speedily and quickly to windward.

weatherly (weTH'ér-li), a. [< weather + -ly.] Naut., making very little leeway when close-hauled, even in a stiff breeze and heavy sea: noting a ship or boat.

Notwithstanding her weatherly qualities, the heavy cross sea, as she drove into it, headed her off badly.

M. Scott, Tom Cringle's Log, vii.

weather-map (weTH'ér-map), n. A map showing the temperature, pressure, wind, weather, and other meteorological elements over an extensive region, compiled from simultaneous observations at a large number of stations. The pressure is represented by isobars, the temperature by isotherms, the wind by arrows, and the weather by differently shaped circles or other conventional symbols. Weather-maps, prepared once or twice daily, form the basis upon which every government weather-service forecasts the weather and issues storm-warnings.

weathermost (weTH'ér-möst), a. superl. [< weather + -most.] Furthest to windward.

weather-notation (weTH'ér-nō-tā'shon), n. A system of abbreviation for the principal meteorological phenomena. Beaufort's weather-notation, which is used in Great Britain, is as follows: b, blue sky, whether clear or hazy; c, clouds (detached); d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, very gloomy; h, hail; i, lightning; m, mist; o, overcast; p, passing, temporary showers; q, squally; r, rain; s, snow; t, thunder; u, ugly, threatening weather; v, dew.

weather-plant (weTH'ér-plant), n. The Indian licorice, Abrus precatorius; so named in view of an alleged property of indicating the weather in advance. It is a common tropical twining shrub (see Abrus), having pinnate leaves with from 20 to 40 small leaflets. Recent careful observations show that the pairs of leaflets fold together more or less as the light is stronger or weaker, the movement being less vigorous in a moister atmosphere; that a certain wrinkling of the surface co-exists with a coloring of the margin likely to be due to the attacks of an insect; and that the movement of the rachis, supposed to be barometric, is a diurnal oscillation which varies in extent with the amount of light. The temperature also affects the freedom of those motions. These characteristics are all paralleled in other plants, especially of the Leguminosæ. As a means of forecasting, the plant is not likely to be of practical worth.

Lord, thou hast given me a cell
Wherein to dwell,
A little house, whose humble roof
Is weather-proof.

Herrick, A Thanksgiving to God for his House.

There were only ten persons at the conference meeting last night, and seven of them were women; he wonders how many weather-proof Christians there are in the parish.

C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 72.

weather-prophet (weTH'ér-prof'et), n. [= Dan. veir-profet; as weather + prophet.] 1. One who foretells weather; one skilled in foreseeing the changes or state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Who that has read Greek does not know the humour with which the meteorological theories of the Athenian weather-prophets are ridiculed by Aristophanes in "The Clouds"? R. H. Scott, in Modern Meteorology, p. 166.

2. Anything in nature which serves as an indicator of weather changes, as a bird whose regular periodicity of migration or suddenness of appearance may indicate meteorological changes inappreciable by man.

Swallows have long been held for weather-prophets, and with reason enough in the quick response of their organization to the influence of atmospheric changes.

Coues, Birds of the Colorado Valley (1878), I. 372.

3. A device for foretelling changes in the weather. In most forms materials are employed which are so affected by dampness as to move some indicator, as a pair of figures, of which one appears or advances in dry and the other in wet weather. Other forms employ materials which change color according to the state of the atmosphere. Compare weather-box.

weather-report (weTH'ér-rē-pört'), n. A daily report of meteorological observations and of probable changes in the weather, especially one issued by a weather-service. [Colloq.]

weather-roll (weTH'ér-röl), n. The roll of a ship to windward, in a heavy sea on the beam: opposed to lee lurch.

weather-service (weTH'ér-sér'vis), n. An institution organized for taking meteorological observations in accordance with a systematic plan, and for utilizing the data thus collected by forecasting the weather, issuing warnings of storms and floods, publishing climatological tables, distributing information as to the effect of the weather on growing crops, and by allied services. All the principal governments of the world now maintain a weather-service, upon which a part or all of these duties are imposed. In the United States an annual appropriation of nearly a million dollars is made to the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, which is charged with performing these services. In addition to the Weather Bureau, and cooperating with it, there is organized in nearly every State a State weather-service, composed of voluntary observers whose work is directed toward giving information upon the condition of the crops as affected by the weather, and in general toward extending knowledge of local climatology.

weather-shore (weTH'ér-shör), n. The shore from which the wind blows.

[The wind] set so violently as rais'd on the sudden so great a sea that we could not recover the weather-shore for many hours.

Erskine, Diary, Oct. 11, 1644.

weather-sign (weTH'ér-sin), n. Any phenomenon or sensation indicating state or change of weather; hence, generally, any prognostic or sign.

I am not old for nothing; I can tell

The weather-signs of love; you love this man.

Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, ii.

weather-spy (weTH'ér-spī), n. One who foretells the weather; a weather-prophet. Donne. [Rare.]

weather-stain (weTH'ér-stān), n. [< weather + stain.] A stain or discoloration left or produced by the weather or by weathering.

Walls must get the weather-stain

Before they grow the ivy.

Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, viii.

He . . . felt that the shape and colour of every roof and weather-stain and broken hillock was good, because his growing senses had been fed on them.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, iii. 9.

With weather-stains upon the wall,
And stairways worn, and crazy doors.

Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

weather-stained (weTH'ér-stānd), a. Stained or discolored by the weather. See weathering, 2.

A tomb somewhat weather-stained.

Longfellow.

weather-station (weTH'ér-stā'shon), n. A station where daily meteorological observations are made and reported to a central office; one of the stations of a weather-service.

weather-strip (weTH'ér-strip), n. A slender strip of some material intended to keep out wind and cold; originally, a strip of wood covered with soft material, as list or cloth; specifically, a contrivance by which a strip of india-rubber is adjusted closely to the apertures of a door or window, or its frame or jamb, covering the crevice very tightly: it is generally a wooden molding into which a thin strip of rubber is fitted.

weather-strip (weTH'ér-strip), v. t.; pret. and pp. weather-stripp'd, pp. weather-stripping. To apply weather-strips to; fit or secure with weather-strips.

weather-symbol (weTH'ér-sim'bŏl), n. A conventional sign used in meteorological records, or in published meteorological observations or weather-maps, to represent graphically any designated phenomenon. The following symbols have been adopted by the International Meteorological Congress to represent the principal hydrometers and a few other phenomena. Rain, ☉; snow, ❄; thunderstorm, ⚡; lightning, ⚡; hail, ▲; mist, ☁; frost, ❄; dew, ☁; snowdrift, +; high wind, ⚡; solar corona, ☉; solar halo, ☉; lunar corona, ☾; lunar halo, ☾; rainbow, ☉; aurora, ✨; haze, dust haze, ☁.

weaver (wé'vər), n. [ME. wæwre, wewar, wāwre AS. wēwre = MD. D. wever = OHG. webern, MHG. weharen, G. weber = Sw. väfware = Dan. væver, a weaver; as weaver 1 + -er.] (f. webber.) 1. One who weaves; one whose occupation is weaving.
Weavers also of wolne and lynnyn.
 Quoted in Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xlvii.
Weavers were supposed to be generally good singers. Their trade being sedentary, they had an opportunity of practising, and sometimes in parts, while they were at work. Warburton adds that many of the weavers in Queen Elizabeth's days were Flemish Calvinists, who fled from the persecution of the Duke of Alva, and were therefore particularly given to singing psalms. . . . Hence the exclamation of Elftall, "I would I were a weaver! I could sing psalms, and all manner of songs." Nares.

2. In ornith., a weaver-bird. — 3. In entom.: (a) A gyrinid beetle; a whirlingig; so called from its intricate circlings and gyrations on the surface of the water. See whirlingig, 4, and cut under Gyrinidae. (b) A spinning-spider; a true araneid which weaves a web. Various groups of such spiders are distinguished by the form of their webs, as line-weavers, orb-weavers, tapstry-weavers, tube-weavers, tunnel-weavers, etc. See spider.
4. In zool., same as weaver. — Mahali weaver. See weaver-bird. Sockale weaver. See weaver bird.
Tapstry weaver. See tapstry. Weavers' bottom, a chronic inflammation of a bursa situated over the tuberosity of the ischium, occurring as a result of sitting long and constantly on a hard seat. Yellow-crowned weaver. See weaver-bird.

weaver-bird (wē'vēr-bĕrd), n. One of numerous Old World (chiefly African and Indian) conirostral passerine birds, noted for the dexterity and ingenuity with which they weave the materials of their nests into a textile fabric, and also for the extraordinary size and unusual shape of some of these structures. The name weaver-bird, in its present broad sense, is modern, and appears to have originally specified a single species (see below). In the last and early in the present century the birds of this group which were then known were classed with the finches and grosbeaks, sometimes with the orioles, mainly according to the thickness of the bill, and some of them received still more misleading names. Though there was an Oriolus texor in 1788, the genus Ploceus was not named till 1817, and the family Ploceidae not till 1847. With the recognition of this large and variable group as well marked from the Fringillidae by the possession of 10 instead of 9 primaries, an English name was given to the Ploceidae, and weavers or weaver birds, or weaver-birds, were synonymized with Ploceidae, without implying that all the birds so named build very elaborate nests. (See Ploceus, Ploceidae.) Two remarkable types of nest may be noted. One is the hive-nest of the republican or social weavers, many pairs of which build in common in the fork of a tree, etc. (see Phalacrocorax, and Phalacrocoracidae). The other, the usual type of nest is the cup-shaped or saucer-shaped loosely woven, like that of the American hang-nests, but more elaborate, and with a hole in one side instead of being open at the top. In this latter type the nest of a house finch, Carpodacus, is and bottle-tits) and some wrens. These nests are generally slung at the ends of long slender drooping branches, often over the water of a pool or stream, where they are safest from monkeys and snakes. In some cases the males build additional nests for themselves, in which no eggs are to be laid—a habit, however, not confined to weaver birds (see cock-nest). One of the largest, most characteristic, and best-known genera of weaver-birds is the Art in form called Onga (a preoccupied name) by Lesson 16 1831, and Pyronechta by Bonaparte in that year, though often called Euphates (Swainson, 1837). There are 12 or 15 species, the characteristic coloration of which is black set off with scarlet or orange in large massed areas. P. orp, the male of which is scarlet and black, is about 5 inches long; it was originally described by Edwards in 1761 as “the grenadier,” from some fancied likeness of its plumage to a soldier’s uniform. It inhabits South Africa. P. aurea of western Africa is the golden-backed flinch and gold-backed grosbeak of the early ornithologists, being one of the yellow and black species. P. capensis, the Cape grosbeak of Latham, is another, from Cape Colony. P. taha, sometimes known as the Mahali weaver, and generally called Ploceus or Euphates taha, is very small (scarcely 4½ inches long), of rich golden-yellow and velvety-black hues, and its nest is disproportionately large. It belongs to an extensive region of south-eastern Africa. (See cut under taha.) Several other African weavers represent the genus Ploceus (passer, as P. mahali). There is a large series of small birds, all technically weavers (Ploceidæ), which fall in the spermiestine division of the family, and belong to numerous genera of the Ethiopian, Oriental, and even the Australian region, as various amadavants, waxbills, strawberry-flinches, blood finches, generals, etc. (See Viduina (a), and cuts under Ploceus, Scolecif, Trogoniopsis, and waxbill.) The birds of an extensive Oriental and Australian genus Munia (with its subdivisions, as Padda) belong here. (See cut under sparrow.) Fifteen species of Uroloncha, characterized by exserted middle tail feathers, range from Africa to New Guinea; one of them is U. aculeirostris. The genus Erythrura is another large one, reaching from India through much of Polynesia. None of the foregoing birds falls in the subfamily Ploceinæ as now restricted. Among the latter may be noted the species of the African genus Sitta-gra, 6 in number, of which the best-known is S. capensis of Cape Colony, the olive oriole of Latham, commonly called yellow-crowned weaver and Ploceus icterocephalus. This is 7 inches long, of an olive and golden-yellow and black color; it builds a large bottle-shaped or kidney-formed penile nest. Foudia is a Madagascan type. The most extensive genus of all is the African Hyphantornis, with over 30 species, or the golden weavers, as H. galbula. These birds represent in Africa, or may be compared with, the hang-nest orioles of America. One of the longest- and best-known is H. cucullatus of western Africa, from Senegambia to the Gaboon; it has oftener been called H. texor (after Oriolus texor of Gmelin, 1788), and enjoys the distinction of being one of the first, if not the first, to which the name weaver attached, being the weaver oriole of Latham (1782); it is 6 inches long, yellow and black. Malimbus is an African genus of black and crimson, scarlet, vermilion, or yellow coloration, as M. cristatus. The African genus Tor (one of the early names Temminck, 1828) has 2 marked species, T. albifrons (or alco), the white billed, and T. erythrorhynchus (or ner), the red-billed. (See cut under Tor.) Finally, the genus Ploceus itself is now restricted to an Oriental type of a few species, commonly called bana-birds, though it used to be indiscriminately applied to any of the foregoing, and became the name-giving genus of the whole group. See cut under Ploceus. (For those Ploceids known as ahidah-birds, see Vidua.)

Weaver-but I'll phantom my texter

weaveress (wé'ver-es), n. [< weaver + -ess.]
A female weaver.
He found two looms alone remaining at work, in the hands of an ancient weaver and weaveress.
J. H. Blunt, Hist. of Dursley, p. 222. (Davies.)

weaver-finch (wē'vēr-finch), n. Any weaver-bird.

The Ploceidae, or weaver finches.

A. R. Wallace, Distribution of Animals, II. 286.

weaver-fish (wē'vēr-fish), n. A fish of the genus Trachinus; a weever. See cut under Trachinus.

weaver-shell (wē'vēr-shel), n. A shuttle-shell.
weaver's-shuttle (wē'vēr-zhūt'ld), n. The shuttle-shell, Radius volva. See Orulam, and cut under shuttle-shell.

weavilt, n. An old spelling of weevil.

weaving (wē'ving), n. [< ME. weyunge, wef-lynge; verbal n. of weave, v.] 1. The act of one who or that which weaves; specifically, the act or art of producing cloth or other textile fabrics by means of a loom from the combination of threads or filaments. In weaving all kinds of fabrics, whether plain or figured, one system of threads, called the warp or weft, is made to pass alternately under and over another system of threads, called the warp, weft, or chain. The essential operations are the successive raising of certain threads of the warp and the depression of others, so as to form a shed for the passage of the weft-yarn, which is then beaten up by means of a lathe or batten. Weaving is performed by the hand in what are called *hand-loom*s, or by steam-power in what are called *power-loom*s, but the general arrangements for both are to a certain extent the same. (See loom.) Weaving, in the most general sense of the term, comprehends not only the manufacture of those textile fabrics which are prepared in the loom, but also that of network, lacework, etc. See cut under shuttle.

2. In the manège, the action of a horse that weaves, or moves the body from side to side.

weazand, n. See weasand.

weazelt, n. See weasel.

weazen (wē'zn). See *wizen*¹.

web (web), n. [*< ME. web, webbe, < AS. web (webb-), a web (= OS. webbi = OFries. web, web = D. web, webbe, a web (= LG. web, webbe = OHG. weppi, wappi, MHG. weppe, webbe, webe, G. dial. webb (cf. G. gewebe), web, woof, = Icel. vefr = Sw. väf = Dan. vāv, web), < wefan, weave: see weave*¹.] 1. That which is woven; a woven fabric; specifically, a whole piece of cloth in course of being woven, or after it comes from the loom.

Biholde how Eleyne hath a newe cote;

I wishe thanne it were myne and al the webbe after [i. e., all left after making the coat].

Piers Plowman (B), v. 111.

My dochter she's a thrifty lass;
She span seven year to me;
An' if it war weil counted up,
Full ten webs it would be.

Kempy Kaye (Child's Ballads, VIII. 140).

At noon
To-morrow come, and ye shall pay
Each fortieth web of cloth to me,
As the law is, and go your way.

M. Arnold, The Sick King in Bokhara.

2. Same as webbing, 1.—3. The warp in a loom. [Provincial].—4. Something resembling a web or sheet of cloth; specifically, a large roll of paper such as is used in the web-press for newspapers.

Several men or boys are placed to receive the sheets [of paper] according to the number into which the width of the web is divided. Ure, Dict., III. 403.

5. Any one of various thin and broad objects, probably so named from some similarity to the thin, broad fabric of the loom. Especially—(a) A sheet or thin plate, as of lead.

There with stately pomp by heaps they wend,
And Christians slain roll up in webs of lead.

Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, x. 26.

(b) The blade of a sword.

A sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pummel, rich stone; hilts, gold, approved by touch.

Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, ii. 98.

(c) The blade of a saw. (d) The plate (or its equivalent) in a beam or girder which connects the upper and lower flat or laterally extending plates. (e) The corresponding part of a rail, between the tread and the foot. See cut under rail. (f) The flat part of a wheel, between the nave and the rim, as in some railway-wheels—occupying the space where spokes would be in an ordinary wheel. (g) The solid part of the bit of a key. (h) The part of an anvil below the head, which is of reduced size. (i) The thin, sharp part of the colter of a plow. See cut under plow. (j) A canvas cloth used in a saddle. (k) The basket-work of a gabion. See cut under gabion. (l) In a vehicle, a combination of bands or straps of a stout fabric, serving to keep the hood from opening too far. E. H. Knight. (m) The arm of a crank.

6. In ornith., the blade, standard, vane, or vexillum of a feather: so called from the texture acquired through the weaving or interlocking of the barbs by the barbules with their barbicels and hooklets. That vane which is furthest from the middle line of the bird's body is the outer web; the other, the inner web, is technically distinguished as pogonium externum and internum. The two often differ from each other in size, shape, or color, or in all these respects; the difference is most pronounced on the flight-feathers

They [barbules] make the vane truly a web: that is, they so connect the barbs together that some little force is required to pull them apart.

Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 84.

7. The plexus of very delicate threads or filaments which a spider spins, and which serves as a net to catch flies or other insects for its food; a cobweb; also, a similar substance spun and woven into a sort of fabric by many insects, usually as a covering or protection. See bag-worm, web-worm, and tent-caterpillar.

The Commissaries court's a spiders webbe,
That doth entangle all the lesser fishes.

Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 51.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit

In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide.

Sir J. Davies, Immortal of Soul, xviii.

8. Figuratively, anything carefully contrived and elaborately put together or woven; a plot; a scheme.

All this is but a web of the wit; it can work nothing.

Bacon, Praise of Knowledge (ed. 1887).

The Fates at length the blissful Web have spun.

Congreve, Birth of the Muse.

O, what a tangled web we weave

When first we practise to deceive!

Scott, Marmion, vi. 17.

It is one web of intricate complications between the Emperors of the East and West, the Republic of Venice, the Kings of Hungary, Dalmatia, and Bosnia.

E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 229.

9. In anat., a connective or other tissue; any open structure composed of fibers and membranes running into each other irregularly as if tangled, and serving to support fat or other soft substances. See tissue and histology.

10. In zool., the membrane or fold of skin which connects the digits of any animal; especially, that which connects the toes of a bird or a quadruped, making the animal palmped, and the foot itself palmate, as occurs in nearly all aquatic birds (hence called web-footed), and in many aquatic mammals, as the beaver, the muskrat, and ornithorhynchus. Webs sometimes occur as a congenital defect of the human fingers or toes. The relatively largest webs are those of the bats' wings. In birds the extent and special character of the webs (technically called palmae) are taken into some account in classification, and some conditions of the webs receive special names. See web-footed, and cuts under *bat*², duckbill, flying-frog, Edemid, otary, palmate, semipalmate, and totipalmate.

Some full-breasted swan

That, fluting a wild carol ere her death, Ruffles her pure cold plum, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs. Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

11. In coal-mining, the face or wall of a long-wall stall in course of being holed and broken down for removal. Gresley. [Midland coal-fields, Eng.]—Basal web, a small web between a bird's toes, extending little if any beyond the basal joints of the digits it connects. See cuts under Ereunetes and semipalmate.—Chain-web, a kind of saw; a scroll-saw.—Choroid web, the velum interpositum.—Emarginate web, a full web between a bird's toes, whose free border is notably concave or emarginate. See cut under totipalmate.—Geometrical spider's web. See geometric, and cut under triangle.—Holland web. Same as holland, n., 1. Incised web, a very deeply emarginate web of a bird's toes.—India-rubber web, a fabric in which a warp of rubber threads is filled with a weft of silk, linen, or cotton. The warp, rendered inelastic during the weaving, has its elasticity subsequently restored by a process in which the fabric is subjected to heat. Also called elastic web.—Mill-saw web, a thin saw carried in a vertical saw-gate, and used for resawing.—Pin and web. See *pin*³.—Spider's web. See spider-web.

web (web), v. t.; pret. and pp. webbed, ppr. webbing. [< ME. webben, < AS. webban, weave, web; from the noun.] 1. To cover with or as with a web; envelop.—2. To connect with a web, as the toes of a bird; render palmate.—Webbed fingers, two or more fingers of the human hand which are united by a band of connecting tissue, either occurring congenitally or as an abnormality, or resulting from cicatrization after burns and other wounds; dactylion. See web-fingered, and Dietel's operation (under operation).—Webbed toes, a condition affecting the toes of the human foot, abnormally or accidentally, similar to that of webbed fingers. See web-footed.

webbet, n. [*< ME. webbe, a weaver, < AS. webba, a weaver, < wefan, weave: see weave*¹, and cf. web. The ME. noun webbe survives in the proper name Webb.] A weaver. See webber.

A webbe, a dyere, and a tapicer.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., I. 362.

The webbes ant the fullaris assembleden hem alle.

Ant makeden hure consail in hure commune halle.

Flemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 270).

webbe², n. An old spelling of web.

webbing (web'ing), n. [< ME. webbyng; verbal n. of web, v.] 1. A woven material, especially one woven without pile, plainly and strongly. The term is applied to material or pieces of material which are intended for strength, to bear a weight, to be drawn tight, or the like, as a belt or surcingle, and also for that which serves to protect and cover the edge of a piece of more delicate fabric; thus, Eastern rugs are often made with several inches of webbing projecting beyond the part that is covered with pile.

2. In printing, the broad tapes used to conduct webs or sheets of paper in a printing-machine, or the broad straps or girths attached to the rounce of the hand-press.—3. In zool., the webs of the digits collectively: as, the webbing is extensive or complete; the webbed state of the digits, or the formation of their webs; palmaria. See web, n., 10.—Elastic webbing. See elastic.

webby (web'i), a. [*< web + -y*¹.] Relating to a web, or consisting of a web, in any sense; web-like; membranous.

Bats on their webby wings in darkness move,
And feebly shriek their melancholy love.

Crabbe, Works, I. 50.

weber (vā'bér), n. [After Wilhelm Weber (1804–1891), a German physicist.] A name proposed by Latimer Clarke for the unit of electrical quantity which has since been named coulomb; it was also for some time used for the practical unit of electrical current which is now called ampere.

Weberian (we-bē'ri-an), a. [< Weber (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to or named after a person named Weber (in the following phrases E. H. Weber, 1795–1833, a German anatomist and physiologist).—Weberian apparatus, the whole of the parts or organs by means of which the air-bladder of some fishes is connected with the ear, including the Weberian ossicles and their connections.

An air-bladder connected with the auditory organ by intervention of a Weberian apparatus, formed of parts of the anterior vertebrae, modified after precisely the same plan as in the other silurids.

Amer. Nat., May, 1889, p. 427.

Weberian ossicles. See ossicle.

weber-meter (vā'bér-mē'tér), n. Same as ampere-meter or as coulomb-meter (see weber).

Weber's chronometer. A kind of metronome invented by Gottfried Weber, consisting of a weight and a graduated and adjustable cord. See metronome.

Weber's corpuscle. The depression in the veru montanum situated between the openings of the ejaculatory ducts.

Weber's experiment. The experiment of closing one ear to find that a vibrating tuning-fork placed with the end resting against the vertex will be heard more distinctly in that ear.

Weber's glands. The mucous glands of the tongue.

Weber's law. See *law*¹.

Weber's paradox. The fact that a muscle, when so stretched that it cannot contract, may elongate.

web-eye (web'i), n. In pathol., same as pterygium, 2.

web-eyed (web'id), a. Exhibiting or affected with the disease called web-eye.

web-fingered (web'fing'gér'd), a. Having the fingers of the hand, or any digits of the fore limb, connected by means of more or less extensive webs formed of a fold of skin: as, the bat is a completely web-fingered animal. The fingers of the human hand are naturally webbed a little at the base, and sometimes connected for their whole length, constituting a congenital deformity. Compare webbed fingers (under web, v. t.), and see cuts under *bat*², flying-frog, and flying-frog.

He was, it is said, web-footed naturally, and partially web-fingered.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 137.

web-foot (web'füt), n. A foot whose toes, or some of them, are webbed; also, the condition of being web-footed. As applied to persons, it implies an abnormal condition, corresponding to the web-fingered.—Gillie web-foot. See gillie.

web-footed (web'füt'ed), a. Having web-feet; being web-toed, whether as an abnormality of persons, or as the natural formation of the feet of many aquatic animals. Many mammals are web-footed, as the seal, the otter, the muskrat, the beaver, and the duck-mole. Nearly all swimming and many wading birds are web-footed, to a varying extent in different cases. The salient batrachians are mostly web-footed, especially frogs, as to their hind feet. See web, n., 10, web, v. t., webbing, 3, pinniped, palmiped, palmate, semipalmate, totipalmate, with various cuts, and those under flying-frog, duckbill, and otary.

web-footedness (web'füt'ed-nes), n. Web-foot; the state of being web-footed.

web-machine (web'mā-shēn'), n. Same as web-press.

Yf that nyl here, a wedge oute of a bronde
Ywrought dryve in the roote, or smidel froo
Let cheche and hld with assheh let it stande.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 53.
Thow wich pyn ther goth a litel wedge which that is cleped the hors.
Chaucer, Astrolabe.
For 'tis with Pleasure as it is with Wedges; one drives out another.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 157.

2. A mass resembling a wedge in form; anything in the form of a wedge.

They gather it [gold] with great labour and mette it and caste it, firste into masses or wedges, and afterwards into blade plates.
R. Eden, tr. of Sebastian Munster (First Books on Amer-ica, ed. Arber, p. 20).

Open the mails, yet guard the treasure sure;
Lay out our golden wedges to the view.
Malouie, Tamburlaine, I, i. 12.

A wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight. Josh. vi. 21.
See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.
Milton, E. R., iii. 309.

3. In her., a bearing representing a triangle with one very acute angle—that is, like a pile, but free in the escutcheon instead of being attached to one of its edges.—4. In Cambridge University, the name given to the man whose name stands lowest on the list of the classical tripos: said to be a designation suggested by the name (Wedgewood) of the man who occupied this place on the first list (1824). Compare wooden spoon, under spoon.

Five were Wranglers, four of these Double men, and the fifth a favorite for the Wedge. The last man is called the Wedge, corresponding to the Spoon in Mathematics.
C. A. Bristol, English University, p. 312.

Foxtail wedge. Same as fox wedge.—The thin or small end of the wedge, figuratively, an intonatory move of small apparent importance, but calculated to produce or lead to an ultimate important effect.—Wedge of least resistance, the form in which loose earth and other substances yield to pressure.—Wooden wedge. Same as wedget, 4.

wedg<sup>1</sup> (wej), v.; pret. and pp. wedged, ppr. wedging. [late ME. wedgen; from the noun.]
1. trans. 1. To cleave with a wedge or with wedges; rive.

My heart.
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain.
Shak., T. and C., i. 1. 35.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven; crowd or compress closely; jam.

Among the crowd 't is the Abbey; where a finger
Could not be wedged in more.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 58.

Wedged in the rocky shoals, and sticking fast.
Dryden, Æneid, v. 285.

The age had not so much refinement that any sense of impropriety restrained the wearers of petticoat and farthingale from stepping forth into the public ways, and wedging their not unsubstantial persons . . . into the throng nearest to the scaffold at an execution.
Haithorne, Scarlet Letter, ii.

3. To fasten with a wedge or with wedges; fix in the manner of a wedge; as, to wedge on a scythe; to wedge in a rail or a piece of timber.—4. In ceram., to cut, divide, and work together (a mass of wet clay) to drive out bubbles and render it plastic, just before placing it on the wheel.—5. To make into the shape of a wedge; render cuneiform.—6. To force apart or split off with or as with a wedge.

Yawning fissures which will surely widen until they wedge off the projecting masses, and strip huge slices from the face of the cliff.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii.

II. intrans. To force one's way like a wedge.

Hamting
The Globes and Mermaids, wedging in with lords Still at the table. B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, iii. 1.

A pledge; a gage. Halliwel.

wedgebill (wej'bil), n. A humming-bird of the genus Schistes, having the bill of peculiar shape, rather thick for a hummer, and suddenly sharp-pointed. There are 2 species, both Ecuadorian, S. geoffroyi and S. personatus, 3½ inches long. See cut in preceding column.

wedge-bone (wej'bôn), n. An ossicle often found on the under surface of the spinal column at the junction of any pair of vertebrae: more fully called subvertebral wedge-bone.

Such a separate ossification, or sub-vertebral wedge-bone, is commonly developed beneath and between the odontoid bone and the body of the second vertebra [in Lacer-tilia].
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 187.

wedge-cutter (wej'kut'ér), n. 1. An instrument used in dentistry to cut off the projecting part of a wedge that has been driven between two teeth.—2. In wood-working, a machine for relishing and cutting the wedges of a door-rail. See relish<sup>2</sup>. E. H. Knight.

wedged (wejd), a. [from wedge + -ed.] In zool., wedge-shaped; cuneiform or cuneate: as, a wedged bone; the wedged tail of a bird.

wedge-micrometer (wej'mi-krom-e-tér), n. See micrometer.

wedge-photometer (wej'tô-tom'e-tér), n. An instrument for measuring the brightness of stars. It consists of a long wedge of neutral-tinted dark glass arranged to slide before the eyepiece of a telescope, and provided with a graduated scale. The scale-reading, which corresponds to the thickness of the wedge at the point where the image of the star becomes invisible, determines the star's brightness.

wedge-press (wej'pres), n. A press for extracting oil from seeds, as hemp-seed, sunflower-seed, etc., by crushing. It has perforated iron cheek-plates, between which the seeds are placed in hair bags, with blocks and wedges between the bags and the plates. A tightening-wedge is then driven in by a maul, and the juice escapes through the perforations in the plates, and is collected in a cistern below.

wedge-shaped (wej'shapt), a. Having the shape of a wedge; wedged; cuneiform; cuneate: as, a wedge-shaped leaf; the wedge-shaped tail of a bird: usually noting surfaces, without regard to solidity.—Wedge-shaped isobar, an isobar bounding a projecting area of high pressure moving along between two cyclones.

wedge-shell (wej'shel), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Donacidae.

wedge-tailed (wej'tâld), a. Having the tail wedged or cuneate: noting birds whose tail-feathers are regularly graduated in length to such an extent that the tail when moderately spread appears to be beveled off obliquely at the end from the middle to the outermost feather on each side. It is a very common formation. See cuts under Sphenocercus, Sphenura, Trichoglossus, and Urotrichus.—Wedge-tailed eagle, Urotrichus, of Australia. See cut under Urotrichus.
Wedge-tailed pigeon or dove. See Sphenocercus (with cut).

wedge-valve (wej'valv), n. A wedge-shaped valve driven into its seat by a screw: used for closing water-mains, etc.

wedge-wise (wej'wiz), adv. In the manner of a wedge.

wedging (wej'ing), n. 1. A method of joining timbers, in which the tenon is made just long enough to pass through the mortised piece, and a small wedge is driven into a saw-cut in the end of the tenon, with the effect of expanding it, and thus preventing its withdrawal.—2. In kneading clay for fine modeling, the process of cutting the clay to pieces, as by means of a strained wire, and then throwing the severed pieces forcibly upon the mass, the object being to expel the air.—Foxtail wedging. See foxtail.

wedging-crib (wej'ing-krib), n. In mining, in shaft-sinking in very watery ground, a curb or crib on which the tubbing is placed. It generally consists of pieces of oak carefully shaped and joined together. Between the exterior of this curb and the rock there is left a space of a few inches in width, which is made water-tight by the most careful wedging and the use of moss. The object of the whole arrangement of the wedging-crib and the tubbing which rests upon it is permanently to hold back the water which would otherwise find its way into the shaft and have to be raised to the surface by pumping. In some mining districts the wedging-crib is made of cast-iron.

Wedgwood scale. A scale used by the inventor in measuring high temperatures by his pyrometer: as, 10° Wedgwood. The zero corresponds to 1077° F.

wedgy (wej'gi), a. [from wedge<sup>1</sup> + -y.] Formed or adapted to use as a wedge; fitted for prying into or among.

Pushed his wedgy snout far within the straw sub-jacent.
Landon. (Imp. Dict.)

Save in here wedhod

That ys feyre to lone God.

Any one of those herbaceous plants which are useless and without special beauty, or especially which are positively troublesome. The application of this general term is somewhat relative. Handsome but pernicious plants, as the oxeye daisy, cone-flower, and the purple cow-wheat of Europe (Melampyrum arvense), are weeds to the agriculturist, flowers to the esthetic. So also plants that are cultivated for use or beauty, as grasses, hemp, carrot, parsnip, morning-glory, become weeds when they spring up where they are not wanted. The exotics of cool countries are sometimes weeds in the tropics.*

On fat londe and ful of donge foulest weedes groweth.
Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 224.

An ill weed grows apace. Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, iv. 3.

2. A sorry, worthless animal unfit for the breeding of stock; especially, a leggy, loose-bodied horse; a race-horse having the appearance but wanting the other qualities of a thoroughbred. [Slang.]

He bore the same relation to a man of fashion that a weed does to a "winner of the Derby."
Lever, Davenport Dunn, ii.

3. A cigar; with the definite article, tobacco. [Colloq.]

Wedgebill (Schistes personatus).

week<sup>3</sup> (wēk'), n. [See also weik, wiek; a var. of wiek<sup>1</sup>.] A corner; an angle; as, the weeks of the mouth or the eye.

The men of the world say we will sell the truth; we will let them ken that we will hing by the wicks of the mouth for the least point of truth.

M. Bruce, Soul-Confirmation, p. 18. (Jamieson.)

week-day (wēk'dā), n. [E. dial. weeke-day; < ME. wekeday, < AS. wīcedag, wīcedag = Icel. víkudagr; as wēk<sup>1</sup> + dag<sup>1</sup>.] Any day of the week except Sunday: often used adjectively.

She lones Preaching better then Praying, and of Preachers Lecturers, and thinkes the Week-days Exercise fare more edifying then the Sundays.

Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Shee precise Hypocrite.

One solid dish his week-day meal affords,

An added pudding solemnised the Lord's.

Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 345.

For dinner—which on a week-day is hardly ever eaten at the coster-monger's abode—they buy "block ornaments," as they call the small, dark-coloured pieces of meat exposed on the cheap butchers' blocks or counters.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 52.

Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), i. 2328.

2. Exudation; sweat, as of a gum-tree; a leak, as in the joint of a pipe. [Obsolete, colloq., or trade use.]

weep<sup>2</sup>, n. [Imitative.] Same as pewweep for pwit. Also wype, wipe.

If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers; tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much.

Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, ii. 6.

Laughing is easy, but the wonder lies

What store of brine supplied the weeper's eyes.

Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x. 46.

2. Something worn conventionally as a badge of mourning. (a) A strip of white linen or muslin worn on the end of the sleeve like a cuff. The term is also used for the band of crape worn as a mark of mourning.

Our . . . mourners clap bits of muslin on their sleeves, and these are called weepers.

Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xvi.

There was not a widow in all the country who went to such an expense for black bombazine. She had her beautiful hair confined in crimped caps, and her weepers came over her elbows.

Thackeray, Bluebeard's Ghost.

(b) A long husband, like a scarf, of crape or other black stuff, worn by men at a funeral.

It is a funeral street, Old Parr Street, certainly; the carriages which drive there ought to have feathers on the roof, and the butlers who open the doors should wear weepers.

Thackeray, Philip, ii.

(c) The long black crape veil worn by a widow in her weeds.

Most thankful I shall be to see you with a couple o' pounds' worth less of crape. . . . If anybody was to marry me flattering himself I should wear these hideous weepers two years for him, he'd be deceived by his own vanity, that's all.

George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxxx.

3. Anything resembling a weeper in senses 1 and 2 in shape or use.

The firs were hung with weepers of black-green moss.

B. Taylor, Northern Travels, p. 169.

The eyes with which it [the aqueduct tunnel] weeps are rightly called weepers, being small rectangular openings in the side walls, through which all the water collected and collecting on the outside of the masonry pours into the inside.

New York Tribune, February 2, 1890.

The threads, taken together, which run across the web from side to side, or from selva to selva. Also called woof.
 The weft was so called from its being "wafted" in and out of the warp; it is also often called the woof, though more correctly the woof is the same as the web or finished stuff.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII, 296.
 2. In bot., a name sometimes given to a felt-like stratum produced in certain fungi by abundant closely interwoven hyphae.

The peripheral portion of the delicate hyphal weft.
De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 217.

weft<sup>2</sup>. An obsolete form of the preterit and past participle of weave 1.

Ne can thy fivewoable destiny bee weft.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 36.

weft<sup>3</sup>, n. Same as waif.

weft<sup>4</sup> (weft), n. A dialectal form of waft, 3.

The strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar-off.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 883.

weftage (weft'āj), n. [< weft + -age.] Texture; the style or quality of the web, as of any textile fabric.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned, whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed.
Greer, Museum. (Latham)

weft-fork (weft'fōrk), n. 1. A device employed in some looms to lay in, piece by piece, a filling of slats, whalebone, palm-leaf, or other stiffening material.—2. An early arrangement for stopping a loom in case of the failure of the weft-thread. It is essentially a weighted lever, which is supported by the weft-thread, and performs its action by falling in the event of the breakage or failure of the thread.

wegget, n. A Middle English form of wedge.

weht, n. See weht.

wehtnest, n. Same as wightness.

weheet, n. See wieght.

wehrgeld, n. See wergild.

wehrlite (wār'lit), n. [Named after Aloys Wehrle, an Austrian metallurgist and mining official (1791-1835).] A mineral obtained from Deutsch-Pilsen, in Hungary, in steel-gray folia with bright metallic luster and high specific gravity (8.4). It consists essentially of bismuth and tellurium, and some analyses show the presence of a small amount of silver. It is allied to tetradymite, but its exact composition is uncertain, and it is possible that more than one species may be included under the name.

wehr-wolf, n. See werwolf.

weht, n. An old spelling of way.

weibyeite, n. A rare fluo-carbonate of the metals of the cerium group, occurring in minute white crystals in southern Norway.

Weierstrassian (vī-ēr-stras'i-an), a. Of or pertaining to, or named from, K. T. W. Weierstrass, a German mathematician (born 1816).

—Weierstrassian function. (a) One of the functions used in Weierstrass's method of treating elliptic functions. (b) The function

$$f(x) = \sum_{n=0}^{\infty} b_n \cos(an) \pi x.$$

In certain cases, as when  $p = 1$ ,  $b_1 < 1$ ,  $\frac{1}{2} \pi$ , this function, although continuous, has no differential coefficient. In fact, the curve of the function, when seen at a distance, appears like a simple curve of sines; but when it is magnified, small waves are seen upon it; under a higher magnifying power, wavelets on these waves; and so on ad infinitum; so that, although  $f(x)$  becomes infinitely small with  $x$ , yet it has no limiting ratio to  $x$ .

Weigelia (wī-jē'li-ā), n. [Properly Weigela; named for C. E. Weigel, a German botanist.] See Durilla.

Weigert's method. The method of tracing the course of the medullated nerve-fibers by hardening and staining them.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 883.

weftage (weft'āj), n. [< weft + -age.] Texture; the style or quality of the web, as of any textile fabric.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned, whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed.
Greer, Museum. (Latham)

weft-fork (weft'fōrk), n. 1. A device employed in some looms to lay in, piece by piece, a filling of slats, whalebone, palm-leaf, or other stiffening material.—2. An early arrangement for stopping a loom in case of the failure of the weft-thread. It is essentially a weighted lever, which is supported by the weft-thread, and performs its action by falling in the event of the breakage or failure of the thread.

wehrlite (wār'lit), n. [Named after Aloys Wehrle, an Austrian metallurgist and mining official (1791-1835).] A mineral obtained from Deutsch-Pilsen, in Hungary, in steel-gray folia with bright metallic luster and high specific gravity (8.4). It consists essentially of bismuth and tellurium, and some analyses show the presence of a small amount of silver. It is allied to tetradymite, but its exact composition is uncertain, and it is possible that more than one species may be included under the name.

Weierstrassian (vī-ēr-stras'i-an), a. Of or pertaining to, or named from, K. T. W. Weierstrass, a German mathematician (born 1816).

—Weierstrassian function. (a) One of the functions used in Weierstrass's method of treating elliptic functions. (b) The function

$$f(x) = \sum_{n=0}^{\infty} b_n \cos(an) \pi x.$$

In certain cases, as when  $p = 1$ ,  $b_1 < 1$ ,  $\frac{1}{2} \pi$ , this function, although continuous, has no differential coefficient. In fact, the curve of the function, when seen at a distance, appears like a simple curve of sines; but when it is magnified, small waves are seen upon it; under a higher magnifying power, wavelets on these waves; and so on ad infinitum; so that, although  $f(x)$  becomes infinitely small with  $x$ , yet it has no limiting ratio to  $x$ .

To raise or lift; bear up: as, to weigh anchor; to weigh a ship that has been sunk.

And so ye same morning we weighed our ancre and made sayle, and came into the foresayd haven at Mylo.
Sir R. Gwyfforde, Pilgrimage, p. 63.

[The ship] struck upon a rock, and, being forced to run ashore to save her men, could never be weighed since, although she lies a great height above the water.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 3.

2. To bear up or balance in order to determine the weight of; determine the relative heaviness of (something) by comparison in a balance with some recognized standard; ascertain the number of pounds, ounces, etc., in: as, to weigh sugar; to weigh gold.

Like stuffe haue I read in S. Francis Legend, of the balance wherein men's deedes are weighed, and the Devil lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice.
Purphas, Pilgrimage, p. 140.

Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, i. 1.

5. To outweigh or overpower; burden; oppress. See the following phrase.—To weigh down. (a†) To preponderate over.

He weighs King Richard down.

Shak., Rich. II., iii. 4. 89.

(b) To oppress with weight or heaviness; overburden; depress.

Thou [sleep] no more wilt weigh my eyelids down.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 7.

II. intrans. 1. To weigh anchor; get under way or in readiness to sail.

When he was aboard his bark, he weighed and set sail, and shot off all his guns.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 232.

The vessel weighs, forsakes the shore,
And lessens to the sight.

Cooper, The Bird's Nest.

2. To have weight, literally or figuratively.

Alliances, how near soever, weigh but light in the Scales of State.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 117.

3. To be or amount in heaviness or weight; be of equal effect with in the balance: as, a nugget weighs several ounces; a load which weighs two tons. The terms expressing the weight are in the adverbial objective. That which a balance measures is the proportionate acceleration of masses toward the center of the earth. This is equal to their proportionate masses; and mass is the important quantity determined. The weight, or attraction of gravitation (less the centrifugal force), differs at different stations, and is not determined by the operation of weighing.

And the Frenshe kyng gaue hym a goblet of syluer weyngne iiiij. marke.

Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. lxxxvii.

Master Featherstone, O Master Featherstone, you may now make your fortunes weigh ten stone of feathers more than ever they did!

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

4. To be considered as important; have weight in the intellectual balance.

He finds . . . that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands . . . before him.

Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ii.

Such considerations never weigh with them.

Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xci.

5. To bear heavily; press hard.

Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart.

Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 45.

6. To consider; reflect.

My tongue was never oil'd with "Here, an't like you,"
"There, I beseech you"; weigh, I am a soldier,
And truth I covet only, no fine terms, sir.

Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1.

The soldiers, less weighing because less knowing, clamoured to be led on against any danger.

Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

To weigh down, to sink by its own weight or burden.

The softness of the stalk, which maketh the bough, being over-loaded, . . . weighs down.

To weigh in, in sporting, to ascertain one's weight before the contest. Whyte Melville, White Rose, I. xiv.

weigh<sup>1</sup> (wā'), n. [< weighl<sup>1</sup>, r.] A certain quantity or measure, estimated by weight; a measure of weight (compare wey); in the South Wales coal-fields, a weight of ten tons.

weigh<sup>2</sup> (wā'), n. A misspelling of wayl<sup>1</sup>, in the phrase under way, due to confusion with the phrase to weigh anchor.

We lost no time in getting under weigh again.

B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 230.

weigh<sup>3†</sup>, n. See weigh.

weighage (wā'āj), n. [< weighl<sup>1</sup> + -age.] A rate or toll paid for the weighing of goods.
Imp. Dict.

weigh-bank (wā'bāk), n. The beam of a balance; hence, in the plural, a pair of scales. [Scotch.]

Capering in the air in a pair of weigh-banks, now up, now down. Scott, Redgauntlet, xxiv. (Encyc. Dict.) weigh-beam (wā'bēm), n. A weighing-scale carried by a wooden or iron horse, for convenience in weighing freight at a dock or railroad-station; a portable scale used by custom-house weighers, etc.

weigh-board (wā'board), n. In mining. See way-board.

weigh-bridge (wā'brij), n. A weighing-machine for weighing carts, wagons, etc., with their load.

weigh-can (wā'kan), n. A reservoir from which supplies are drawn, so connected with a scale that any desired weight may be conveniently drawn out.

weighed† (wād), a. Balanced; experienced.

A young man not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

weiger (wā'ēr), n. [< ME. weyere (= MLG. MHG. weger); < weighl<sup>1</sup> + -er<sup>1</sup>.] 1. One who or that which weighs; an officer whose duty it is to weigh commodities or test weights.—2†. The equator.

This same circle is cleped also the weyere (equator) of the day, for, when the some is in the hevedes of Aries and Libra, than ben the daies and the nyhtes ilike of lengthe in the world. Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. sec. 17.

Sacker and weiger. See sacker.

weighership (wā'ēr-ship), n. [< weiger + -ship.] The office of weiger.

weigh-house (wā'hous), n. A building (generally of a public character) at or in which goods are weighed by suitable apparatus.

He shall, with an hour's lying in the pulpit, get enough to find thirty or forty sturdy lubbers a month long, of which the weakest shall be as strong in the belly, when he cometh unto the manger, as the mightiest porter in the weigh-house.

Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 76.

weighing (wā'ing), n. [< ME. weyngne, weyngne; verbal n. of weighl<sup>1</sup>, v.] 1. The act of ascertaining weight.—2. As much as is weighed at once: as, a weighing of beef. Imp. Dict.—3. Same as weighing.

weighing-cage (wā'ing-kāj), n. A cage in which living animals, as pigs, sheep, and calves, may be conveniently weighed.

weighing-house (wā'ing-hous), n. Same as weigh-house.

weighing-machine (wā'ing-ma-shēn'), n. Any contrivance by which the weight of an object may be ascertained, as the common balance, spring-balance, steelyard, etc. See cuts under balance and steelyard. The term is, however, generally applied only to those contrivances which are employed for ascertaining the weight of heavy bodies, as the machines for the purpose of determining the weights of laden vehicles, machines for weighing cattle, machines for weighing heavy goods, as large casks, bales, etc. The hydrostatic weighing-machine (see cut) consists essentially of a strong cylinder within which moves a tightly packed piston, the space being filled with castor-oil; the loop above is attached to the cylinder and the ring below to the piston. When the object to be weighed is hung on the ring, the piston presses on the oil, and this passes by a channel to a gage which indicates by the motion of the index on the dial the weight in pounds and tons.

weighing-scoop (wā'ing-skōp), n. A combined scoop and spring-balance. The spring is in the handle of the scoop, and while the scoop is being filled the spring is held in place by a stop controlled by the thumb. On raising the loaded scoop the stop is released, and the weight of the contents is indicated on the handle. E. H. Knight.

weigh-lock (wā'lok), n. A canal-lock at which barges are weighed and their tonnage is settled.

weighman (wā'man), n.; pl. weighmen (men). A weigher. [Rare.]

Two weeks after the coopers' strike came the strike of the lightermen and weighmen.

Downward force of a body; gravity; heaviness; ponderousness; more exactly, the resultant of the force of the earth's gravitation and of the centrifugal pressure from its axis of rotation, considered as a property of the body affected by it. Considerable confusion has existed between weight and mass, the latter being the quantity of matter as measured by the ratio of the momentum of a body to its velocity. Weight, in this the proper sense of the word, is something which varies with the latitude of the station at which the heavy body is, being greater by  $\frac{1}{16}$  of itself at the poles than at the equator; it also varies considerably with the elevation above the sea ( $\frac{1}{1775}$  for every kilometer). The weights of different bodies at one and the same station were proved, by Newton's experiments with pendulums of different material, to be in the ratio of their masses, and irrespective of their chemical composition; consequently, a balance which shows the equality of weight of two bodies at one station also shows the equality of their masses. In determining the specific gravity of a body, it is hung by a fine thread to one pan of the balance, and immersed completely in water. The reduced number of pounds, ounces, etc., which is required in the other pan to balance the first, under these circumstances, is called the weight of the body in water. In like manner, we speak of the weight in air and the weight in water. These expressions forbid our conceiving of weight as synonymous with the quantity of matter; and yet, when a pound is said to be a unit of weight, although it is intended to be carried up mountains and to distant places, mass, or quantity of matter, must be understood, since there is no important quantity but the quantity of matter which a pound or a kilogram measures. The confusion is increased when the pound is defined, as it still is in the United States, by the weight of a certain standard in air, without reference to the height of the barometer and thermometer. In the older books on mechanics, a pound is taken as a force, and the quantity of matter is obtained by dividing the weight by the measure of gravity; but now both the theoretical books and the legal definitions of the standards used in weighing make the pound, kilo, etc., to be masses, or quantities of matter, whose weight is obtained by multiplying them by the acceleration of gravity at any station. Nevertheless, the older system still finds a few supporters. It was long after Galileo had firmly established the law of falling bodies before it occurred to anybody that weight was a force. Gravity, so far as common observation shows, draws bodies to the earth alone, and that in parallel lines, and Galileo had shown that it accelerates all bodies alike, whether they are great or small, so that there was nothing to suggest the idea of force, especially as that idea was then in its infancy, and had not attained its present prominence in the minds of men. Weight in those days being looked upon as a property of single bodies, and not as subsisting between pairs of bodies, was necessarily confounded with mass; and a mental inertia, or natural clinging to old conceptions, kept up the confusion after Newton had demonstrated the true law of gravitation. For the units of weight, see def. 5. Abbreviated wt.

2. Mass; relative quantity of matter.—3. A heavy mass; specifically, something used on account of its weight or its mass. Thus, the usefulness of the weights that a man holds in his hands in leaping or jumping lies in the addition they impart to his momentum, and their dragging him down is a disadvantage; but the weights of a clock are for giving a downward pull, and their momentum is practically nothing.

Weinmannia (win-man'i-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1763), named after J. W. Weinmann, a German apothecary.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Saxifragaceae and tribe Cunoniaceae. It is characterized by flowers with imbricated sepals, four or five petals, eight or ten long stamens inserted on the base of a free disk, and small oblong, commonly pilose seeds. There are about 60 species, principally of tropical or south temperate regions, occurring in America, Australia, New Zealand, and the Mascarene and Pacific islands. They are trees or shrubs with opposite branchlets, opposite coriaceous, often glandular leaves, odd-pinnate with a winged rachis. The small white flowers are disposed in simple terminal or axillary erect racemes, followed by small coriaceous two-celled capsules splitting into two sharp boat-like valves. Some species afford a soft light wood used in carpentry and cabinet-work. A Peruvian species yields an astringent bark utilized in tanning. W. tinctoria is employed in the Isle of Bourbon in dyeing red. W. pinnata, a tree with downy branches, native from the West Indies and Mexico to Guiana, is known in Jamaica as bastard brazil. W. Benthami, an evergreen tree of New South Wales, reaches 100 feet high; 4 others are Australian, and 2 occur in New Zealand, of which W. sylvestris, a small tree with blackish bark, is now cultivated in England, and W. racemosa is known as the taunai-bark tree.

weir, weir<sup>3</sup> (wēr), n. [The spelling weir is irreg. and appar. Sc.; the proper spelling is weir; early mod. E. weir, weare, weir, sometimes were; < ME. weir (dat. were), < AS. wer, a weir, dam, fence, hedge, inclosure, = G. wehr, a weir, dam, dike, = Icel. vörr, a fenced-in landing-place; from the root of AS. werian, protect, guard, defend, etc., also fence, dam; see weir<sup>2</sup>.]

1. A dam erected across a river to stop and raise the water, as for the purpose of taking fish, of conveying a stream to a mill, of maintaining the water at the level required for navigating it, or for purposes of irrigation.

Half the river fell over a high weir, with all its appendages of bucks, and hatchways, and eel-baskets, into the Nun's-pool.

2. A fence, as of twigs or stakes, set in a stream for catching fish. Weirs differ from ponds principally in being constructed, in whole or in part, of brush or of narrow boards, with or without netting; and they are sometimes arranged so that at low tide a sand-bar cuts off the escape of the fish, leaving them in a basin, and allowing them to be taken at any time before a certain stage of rise of the next tide. Weirs are of two kinds, the shoal-water weir and the deep-water weir. The shoal-water weir, as illustrated in fig. 1, has a leader L, which is a row of stakes, generally woven with brush, leading out from the shore. Its extremity is at the entrance of the big pound M. The big pound is likewise of stakes filled with brush, and its entrance 30 feet wide. This leads by a passage 5 feet wide into the little pond N, and this into the pocket O, which is a frame about 16 feet long and 10 feet wide, with sides of netting, and a board floor. The fish following the shore meet the leader, turn and follow it into the big pound; here they follow the side around until they pass into the little pond, and from that into the pocket, where they are left by the receding tide and taken out at low water. The deep-water weir (fig. 2) has a similar leader A, extending to the entrance of the big pond, or heart B, beyond which are the small pond C and the bowl D, into which the fish finally go. The form of the inclosures in both cases leads the fish constantly forward, and they rarely or never find their way back through the passages. In both figures E represents the land or high-water mark, and F the low-water mark.

1, shoal-water weir; 2, deep water weir.

The day following we came to Chippanum, where the people were fled, but their wires afforded us fish.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

Deep-water weir. See def. 2.—Dry weir, a weir on a flat which is left bare at low-tide.—Half-tide weir, a fish-weir so placed that the fish taken can be removed at half-tide or half-tide, without waiting for low tide, as is generally done.—Lock-weir, a weir having a lock-chamber and gates. E. H. Knight.—Shoal-water weir. See def. 2.—Slat weir. See slat.

weirangle, n. Same as warriangle. Willughby.
weird (wērd), n. [Formerly also wierd; < ME. werde, werde, wirde, wirde, wurde, < AS. wyrð, wird, wurd, destiny, fate, also, personified, one of the Fates (= OS. wurth = MD. werd, werth = OHG. wurt, MHG. wurth, fate, death, = Icel. urthr, fate, one of the three Norns or Fates), < weorthan (pret. pl. wardon), etc., become, happen; see worth]. Welwitschia (wel-wich'i-ä), n. [NL. (J. D. Hooker, 1863), named after Friedrich Welwitsch (1806-72), an Austrian botanist and traveler.] A genus of gymnospermous plants, of the order Gnetales, among the most remarkable in the vegetable kingdom, distinguished by dioecious many-flowered imbricated cone-like spikes panicle at the margin of a short woody trunk. The only species, W. mirabilis, is a native of sandy regions of southwestern tropical Africa, in Benguela and Damara-land, between 14° and 23° south latitude.

Welwitschia mirabilis.

1. Entire plant. 2. Branch of the panicle, stamens—tube in topen, showing the enclosed style. 3. Side of cone with flower-bud; 4. seed, longitudinal section, showing the calyptroform integument at its apex; 5. ripe seed and base of pericarp; 6. petiole with styliform apex of the integument of the seed; 7. embryo.

Its thick trunk bears two leaves. The original cotyledons, which are opposite, green, spreading, and persistent, are composed of a hard fibrous substance, and become often 6 feet long and 2 or 3 wide. They finally split into long shreds, but are still retained, it is said, through over a hundred years of growth. The mature trunk forms a tabular mass only about a foot high, but 5 or 6 feet across; the top is truncate, hard, pitted, and broken by cracks, and resembles a fungus of the genus Polyporus; the base is deeply sunk in the soil, and produces middle-sized roots. The panicle inflorescence is composed of rigid erect dichotomously jointed stems from 6 to 12 inches high, with two opposite scales sheathing each joint, and is developed annually from the upper side of the trunk at the base of the cotyledons. The flower-spikes are composed of brilliant scarlet scales overlapping, usually in four rows—the male with spikes 1½ inches long or under, the female larger, fewer, and thicker. Each scale contains a flower, the male a small loose membranous perianth, the filaments connate into a loosely exerted tube, and six anthers, each opening by three apical and finally confluent pores. The fruit is dry, two-winged, compressed, inclosed in a fibrous urtic. The new growth is chiefly horizontal, enlarging the stem both above and below the base of the leaf, which finally projects from a deep marginal cavity.

welyt, a. [ME., < AS. welig, welag (= OHG. welagi), rich, wealthy, < wela, weal: see weal.] In a state of weal or good health; healthy.

Westphal balance. A form of balance used in determining the specific gravity of solutions and also of mineral fragments. In the case of fragments a "heavy solution" is first obtained, in which they just float. The balance consists of a bar supported on a fulcrum near the middle, and having one half of it, from whose extremity hangs a sinker, graduated into ten parts. The sinker is immersed in the liquid under experiment, and then riders are hung at suitable points on the bar until it is brought back into a horizontal position as indicated by the fixed scale at the other end. The position and size of the riders give the means of reading off at once the required specific gravity without calculation.

Westphal-Erb symptom. Same as Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

Westphalian (west-fā-li-an), a. and n. [ME. Westphalia (see def.) + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Westphalia, a province of Prussia, bordering on Hanover, the Rhenish Province, the Netherlands, etc. Westphalia was formerly a duchy, and (with larger territory) a Napoleonic kingdom from 1807 to 1813.

Westphal's foot-phenomenon. A series of rhythmical contractions of the calf-muscles following a sudden pushing up of the toes and ball of the foot, thereby putting the tendo Achillis on the stretch; ankle-clonus.

Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

westret, v. i. An old form of west.

Westringia (wes-trin'ji-ā), n. [NL. (Sir J. E. Smith, 1798), named after J. P. Westring, a physician of Linköping, Sweden, who died in 1833.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiate and tribe Prostantheræ. It is characterized by a calyx with five equal teeth, a corolla with the upper lip flatish, and another-connectives without an appendage. There are 9 or 11 species, all natives of extra-tropical Australia. They are shrubs with small entire leaves in whorls of three or four together, and sessile or short-pedicelled twin flowers scattered in the axils of the leaves, or rarely crowded in leafy terminal heads. W. rosmarinifolia, the Victorian rosemary, an evergreen shrub growing about 8 feet high, is sometimes cultivated.

West-Virginian (west-vēr-jin'i-an), a. and n. 1. a. Of or pertaining to West Virginia, one of the United States, set apart from Virginia during the civil war, and admitted to the Union in 1863.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of West Virginia.

westward (west'wārd), adv. [ME. westward; < AS. westwēard, westewēard, westward, < west, west, + -wēard, E. -ward.] 1. Toward the west; in a westerly direction: as, to ride or sail westward.

Westward the course of empire takes its way.

Bp. Berkeley, Arts and Learning in America

wetting-machine (wet'ing-ma-shēn), n. A mechanism that dampens paper and makes it suitable for printing. It is made in many forms, the simplest of which is a flexible and vibrating hose-nozzle attached by a pipe to a water-tank. Paper for web-presses is usually dampened by a spray of water from a perforated pipe as the paper is automatically unwound.

wext, v. An obsolete form of weal.

1. A unit of weight, 14 stone according to the old statute de ponderibus. But a wey of wool is 64 tuns, or 13 stone; locally, 30, 30½, or 31 pounds. A wey of hemp was 30 pounds in Somersetshire, 32 pounds in Dorsetshire, being 8 heads of 4 pounds, twisted and tied. A statute of 1430 declares that cheese shall not be weighed by the ounce, but by the wey of 32 cloves, each clove of 7 pounds, except in Essex, where it is 2½ pounds, or 32 cloves of 7½ pounds. But locally it was 3 hundredweight, or 416 pounds.

Hence—2. A unit of measure, properly 40 bushels. So a statute of George III. makes a wey of salt one ton, which is 40 bushels. But another statute of the same monarch makes a wey of meal 48 bushels of 4 pounds each; and in Devonshire a wey of lime, coals, or culm was sometimes 48 double Winchester bushels. So in South Wales a wey of coals is 6, not 5, chaldrons.

3. An amount of window-glass—60 cases.

Various other genera have been named (as Agapetus for certain so-called scrag-whales), and the generic synonyms of these whales are probably more numerous than the actual species. (b)

whale is extended, nearly always with a qualifying word, to most of the odontocete or toothed cetaceans, and especially to those of great size, as the sperm-whale, but also to some of the smallest, no larger than a dolphin, as the pygmy or porpoise sperm-whales of the genus Kogia, and to various forms of intermediate sizes, as the pilot-whales (Globicephalus), the white whales (Delphinapterus), etc. Some of these whales also have distinctive names into which whale does not enter, as blackfish, beluga, bottlehead, bottlenose, grampus, killer, etc., or they share the qualified names porpoise and dolphin with various small cetaceans more properly so called. The genera and species of the toothed whales are much more numerous than those of the baleen whales; their synonymy is very extensive and intricate, and is in some cases in a state of confusion which can only be cleared up by future research. (c) In geologic time whales date back to the Eocene; and a suborder Archæoceti (contrasted with Odontoceti and Mysticeti) has been named to cover certain forms still only imperfectly known from fragmentary remains. (See Zeu-glodon.) The oldest whales like any of the living forms date from the late Eocene, and are toothed whales related to the humpbacks. Whalebone whales are not known to be older than the Pliocene. (d) In present geographical distribution whales are found in all seas, and some of them enter rivers. Most of the species are individually wide-ranging on the high seas, and attempts which have been made to discriminate similar forms from different waters have in most cases proved futile. Several of the larger forms have been the objects of systematic fisheries for centuries. (See whale-fishery.) The principal products are oil, both train and sperm, baleen or whalebone, spermaceti, and ambergris; the hide of some of the smaller whales affords a leather. Whales are exclusively carnivorous, and feed for the most part upon a great variety of small animals which float on the surface of the sea, generally known collectively as brit or whale-brit. This includes various cephalopods, as squids and cuttles, with other mollusks of different orders, as well as several different kinds of crustaceans. Brit of some kinds covers the ocean in immense areas, to which the whales resort as feeding-grounds. Some whales attack large animals, even of their own kind (see killer, Orcal), but nearly all are timid and inoffensive, seeking only to avoid their enemies, though capable of formidable resistance to attack. Whales bring forth their young alive, like all mammals above the monotremes, and suckle them; the teats are a pair, beside the vulva. They breathe only air, for which purpose they must regularly seek the surface, though capable of remaining long under water without respiring. The spouting of the whale is the act of expiration, during which the air in the lungs, loaded with watery vapor, is forcibly expelled like spray in a single stream, or in two streams, according as the blowholes are single or there are a pair of these spiracles. Some sea-water may be mixed with the breath, if the whale spouts condensed vapor, like that of human breath on a cold day. Whales have a naked skin, saving a few bristles about the mouth, chiefly in the young; the hide is often incrustated with barnacles, or infested with other crustacean parasites. The bodily temperature is maintained in the coldest surroundings by the heavy layer of blubber which lies under the skin of the whole body, and in the sperm-whale forms a special deposit on the skull, giving its singular shape to the head. The general form of the body is like that of a fish, in adaptation to entirely aquatic habits and means of locomotion. It tapers behind the body-cavity in a solid muscular part, the small, and ends in broad, short flukes lying horizontally and extending from side to side. This tail-fin is the principal organ of locomotion, like the vertical caudal fin of a fish. The fore limbs form flippers of varying length in different species. These fins are of medium length in the right whale, short in the sperm and orqual, and extremely long in the humpback. In all cases the pectoral fin has a skeleton composed of the same joints or segments as the fore limb of ordinary mammals, and of all the usual bones except a clavicle; but the digital phalanges are more numerous. The dorsal fin, when present, is a mere excrescence, without any bony basis. There is never any outward sign of hind limbs, but the skeleton of some whales includes certain vestigial bones of a proximal segment of the pelvic limb, entirely separate from the spinal column, and apparently only serving in the male as a suspensorium for the penis. There is consequently no sacrum, nor any break in the series of vertebrae from the hindmost that bears ribs to the end of the spinal column. The cervical vertebrae offer exceptional conditions. (See cut under ankylosia.) The dentition of whales is sufficiently diverse to furnish characters of the main divisions of cetaceans. The entire toothlessness of the baleen whales is matched by few mammals (see Edentata); the presence of teeth in the lower jaw only, as in various odontocete whales, is peculiar; the dentition of the narwhal is wholly exceptional. Teeth, when present, are always homodont (like one another) and monophodont (there being no milk-teeth). The soft palate and the larynx are specialized in adaptation to the act of spouting. The digestive organs are comparatively simple; the uterus is bicornous, the placenta diffuse and non-deciduate; the testes are abdominal; and there is no os penis nor seminal vesicle. The circulatory system is notable for its plexuses, both arterial and venous. Notwithstanding the outward resemblance to a fish, whales belong to the higher (eubacilian) series of mammals, having a relatively large brain. One of the most remarkable of the many anomalies presented by this highly specialized order of mammals is the difference in size of its members, the range being far greater than that of any other ordinal group—from 4 to about 80 feet in linear dimension. The size of the larger whales has been grossly exaggerated in many of the accounts which find popular credence. Adult right whales of different species range from 20 to 50 feet in length, only the polar whale attaining the latter dimension; the common humpback is from 40 to 50 feet long; the sperm-whale reaches 60 feet; and the orquals of several species range from 40 to 80 feet, the maximum length being reached only by the blue orqual, which is the largest of known animals.—Arctic whale, the polar whale, Balæna mysticetus; that right whale which is of circumpolar distribution, as distinguished from any such whale of temperate North Atlantic or North Pacific waters, or from which the latter are sought to be distinguished, as the Atlantic, Pacific, northwest, or Biscay whale.—Atlantic whale, the right whale of temperate North Atlantic waters. California Gray Whale (Rachianectes glaucus).

The whale has long been rare on the coast, and more frequently on that of the Pacific. A similar if not identical right whale is found in the waters of the Pacific, but in objects of the chase in various parts of the south temperate zone. See Delphinidae. Rudolph's whale, the small finner-whale or rorqual, Balaenoptera rostralis. Sibbald's whale, a very large finner-whale, the blue rorqual, Balaenoptera sibbaldi, the largest of all animals. See rorqual. Siebold's whale, a right whale of the North Pacific, Balaenoptera sieboldi. See northeast whale. Smooth whale, a whalebone whale having no teeth in the jaws and no dorsal fin, as a right whale, distinct from finned whale. See finned whale. Southern right whale, Balaena australis of the South Atlantic, admitted as a distinct species from the right whale. See Atlantic whale, above. South Pacific whale, a southern right whale, Balaena antipodensis. Sowerby's whale, a ziphiid whale, Mesoplodon sowerbii, of the Atlantic. Spermaceti whale, the sperm-whale. Sulphur whale, sulphur-bottomed whale. Same as sulphur-bottom. To bone a whale, to take a bone, as the skinner-blade in taking a whale. Toothed whale, a whale or other cetacean with true teeth in both jaws, any member of the division Dentoceti or odontoceti, distinguished from whalebone whale. To throw a tub to a whale. See tub. Very like a whale, an expression of ironical assent to an assertion or a proposition regarded as preposterous: from the use of the phrase by Polonius in humoring Hamlet's supposed madness:

Ham. Methinks it [a cloud] is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 330.

Whalebone whale, a baleen whale; a toothless whale whose mouth contains whalebone, any member of the Balaenidae, as a right whale, humpback, or rorqual, whether furrowed or smooth. Whale of passage, a migratory whale, or a whale during its migration. Whale's bone, ivory; perhaps because supposed to come from the bones of the whale, at a time when the real source of the material was little known, or when most of the ivory used in western Europe consisted of the teeth of the walrus, confounded with the whale, and possibly those of the sperm-whale, which, though of comparatively small size, are of fine quality. The term was in common use for several centuries.

Her hands so white as whales bone, whaleback (hwāl'bak), n. 1. Same as turtleback. 2. A vessel of which the upper deck is rounded generally without upper works. Such vessels were first used on the great lakes.

whale-barnacle (hwāl'bar'nakl), n. A cirriped of the family Coronulidae, parasitic upon whales, as Coronula didactyla. See cut under Coronula.

whale-bird (hwāl'bird), n. 1. One of the blue perrels of the genus Prion, several species of which inhabit the southern ocean. P. citratum, one of the best-known, is notable for the expanse of its beak, the edges of which are beset with tooth-like processes. The name extends to several other oceanic birds which gather in multitudes when a whale has been captured, to feed upon the offal, they are chiefly of the petrel and gull families.

2. The turnstone, Streptopelia interpres, Hearn. [Hudson's Bay.] — 3. The red or gray phalarope. Kumlein. [Labrador.]

whale-boat (hwāl'bōt), n. A long narrow boat, sharp at both ends, and fitted for steering with an oar as well as with a rudder, used in the pursuit of whales, and, from its handy and seaworthy qualities, also for many other purposes. It is usually from 20 to 30 feet long. A pair of these boats is commonly carried by ocean passenger-steamers, in addition to their heavier boats.

whalebone (hwāl'bon), n. and a. [< ME. whale bone, qwal-bon; < whale<sup>1</sup> + bone<sup>1</sup>.] 1. n. 1. The elastic horny substance which grows in place of teeth in the upper jaw of whales of the family Balaenidae (hence called whalebone or bone whales), forming a series of thin parallel plates from a few inches to several feet long; baleen (which see). The term is misleading, for the substance is in no sense bone, but a kind of horn; and its trade-name whale-fin is equally inaccurate, for it has nothing to do with the fins of the whale. Whalebone grows in several hundred close-set parallel plates along each side of the upper jaw of the baleen whale, and thus in the situation occupied by the teeth of ordinary mammals; it is entirely shut in by the lips when the mouth is closed. Each one of the plates of both rows then bends with a strong sweep backward, and when the mouth is opened straightens out, so that there is always a heavy fringe on each side of the cavity of the mouth, forming an impassable barrier to the multitudinous small creatures which the whale scoops in from the surface of the sea. The longest baleen plates are those of the polar whale, some of which may exceed 12 feet in length. The plates in different species differ in color from a dull grayish-black through various streaked or veined colorations to somewhat creamy white. Whalebone stands quite alone among animal substances in a particular combination of lightness, toughness, flexibility, elasticity, and durability, together with such a cleavage (due to the straightness of its parallel fibers) that it may be split for its whole length to any desired thinness of strips. A sulphur-bottom whale has yielded 800 pounds of baleen, of which the longest plates were 4 feet in length. In the California gray whale the longest bone is from 14 to 16 inches, of a light or whitish color, coarse-grained, and heavily and unevenly fringed. The baleen of a finback is of a light lead-color streaked with black, attaining a length of 2 feet 4 inches and a width of from 12 to 14 inches, with a fine fringe from 2 to 4 inches long; it is somewhat ridged crosswise. That of the sharp-headed finner is entirely white, with a short thin fringe; it has been found to consist of 270 pairs of plates, the longest being 10 inches in length. Whalebone is or has been used in the manufacture of a great variety of articles.

2. Something made of whalebone or baleen; a piece of whalebone prepared for some regular use; as, the whalebones of a corset. — 3. Specifically, a whalebone riding-whip. They're neck and neck; they're head and head; They're stroke for stroke in the running; The whalebone whistles, the steel is red, No shirking as yet or shunning. A. L. Gordon, Visions in the Smoke.

whale-head (hwāl'hēd), n. A remarkable gullatorial bird of Africa, related to the herons and storks; so called on account of the size of the head and monstrous shape of the beak; the whale-headed stork, or shoebill, Balænicæps rex, the only representative of the family Balænicæpidæ. See cut under Balænicæpidæ.

whale-headed (hwāl'hēd'ed), a. Having a large heavy head suggestive of a whale's; noting the shoebill. See whale-head. Encyc. Brit., III. 759.

whale-hunter (hwāl'hun'tēr), n. A whaleman.

Oether . . . said that . . . he was come as far towards the north as commonly the whale-hunters use to travel. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 4.

whale-lance (hwāl'lāns), n. The lance used in striking a whale. It may be either a hand-lance or a bomb-lance, but the term is more frequently applied to the former.

whale-line (hwāl'lin), n. Rope from 2 to 3 inches in circumference, made with great care from selected material, and used for harpoon-lines in the whale-fishery. It forms the tow-line of a whale-boat, with which a whale is made fast to the boat by means of the toggle-iron.

Whale-line is three-stranded rope, 2½ inches in circumference, composed of the finest hemp, 32 yards per strand. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 520.

whale-louse (hwāl'lous), n. Any small external parasite of a whale; a fish-louse or epizootic crustacean infesting whales; especially, a lamodipod of the family Cymadidae, as Cymadusa and other species of this genus. See cut under Cymadusa. Also whale-flea.

whaleman (hwāl'man), n.; pl. whalemen (-men). One who whales; a whaler; especially, one engaged in the actual capture of whales, as distinguished from another indirectly concerned in the industry.

Hundreds of islands in the Pacific Ocean were discovered and chartered by whalemen. The Century, XL. 523.

whale-oil (hwāl'oil), n. The oil obtained from the blubber of a whale or other cetacean. (a) Common oil, or train-oil, is that procured from the blubber of any baleen whale; it has a frank odor, and varies in color from honey-yellow to dark brown, according to the character of the blubber and the method of trying-out. It includes several chemically different substances, the more solidifiable of which may be extracted under pressure and cold, and constitute whale-stallor, the fluid residuum being called pressed oil. (b) Sperm-oil or spermaceti-oil is obtained from the sperm-whale and other toothed cetaceans. That from the head of the whale contains the spermaceti, which is deposited at ordinary temperatures on extraction from the animal, leaving the liquid oil, of a clear yellow color. (See spermaceti.) Sperm-oil when refined is much used as a lubricant for delicate machinery, and that from various cetaceans is often named from them, as grampus-oil, porpoise-oil, etc.—Black whale-oil. (a) Oil from the baleen whales, including the rorquals; train-oil. (b) Oil discolored in running machinery.—Pressed whale-oil. See def. (a).

whaler (hwāl'ēr), n. [< whale 1 + -er]. A person or a vessel engaged in the business of capturing whales.

For a whaler's wife to have been "round the Cape" half a dozen times, or even more, was nothing extraordinary. The Century, XL. 511.

But o' Thursday t' Resolution, first whaler back this season, came in port. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, v.

whaler 2 (hwāl'ēr), n. [< whale 2 + -er]. Something whaling, or big or extraordinary of its kind; a whopper; a whacker. [Slang.]

whale-rind (hwāl'rind), n. The skin of a whale. It is thick, tough, and for the most part dark-colored, and overlies the blubber somewhat as the rind of a fruit covers the pulp.

whalery (hwāl'ēr-i), n.; pl. whaleries (-iz). [< whale 1 + -ry]. 1. The industry of taking whales; whaling.

The whalery not being sufficiently encouraging.

Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 7.

2. An establishment for carrying on whale-fishery or any of its branches. [Rare.]

They set up a glass-house, a tanyard, a saw-mill, and a whalery. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 12.

whale's-food (hwāl'z'fōd), n. Whale-brit. See brit 2, whale 1, n., and Clicone.

whale-shark (hwāl'shärk), n. 1. A shark of the family Rhinodontidae, Rhinodon typicus, one of the very largest sharks, and native of warm seas. See the technical names.—2. The basking-shark (which see, with cut).

whale-ship (hwāl'ship), n. A ship built for or employed in the business of whale-fishing; a whaling-ship or whaler.

Smeerenberg . . . was the grand rendezvous of the Dutch whale-ships.

C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 190.

whale-shot (hwāl'shot), n. [< MD. walschot, spermaceti, < wal, whale, + schot, what is cast: see whale 1 and shot]. Spermaceti or matter from the head of the whale: formerly so called by the Dutch and English whalers.

whale's-tongue (hwāl'z'tung), n. A misnomer of the acorn-worms, or species of Balanoglossus, mistranslating the technical generic name.

whaling 1 (hwāl'ing), n. [Verbal n. of whale 1, v.] The act or business of taking whales; the pursuit of whales; whale-fishing: much used in compounds: as, a whaling-ship; a whaling-voyage; whaling-grounds; bay-whaling; shore-whaling.—Whaling company, a company engaged in whaling, consisting of a captain, a mate, a cooper, two boat-steerers, and eleven men. The stock consists of boats, whaling-craft, and whaling-gear, and is divided into sixteen equal shares, and the "lay" of each member of the company is the same. The captain and mate are paid a bonus of $200 or $300 for the term engagement, which is one year, and they are also exempt from all expenses of the company. C. M. Scammon.

whaling 2 (hwāl'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of whale 2, v.] Big, unusual, or extraordinary of its kind; strapping; whopping; whacking: as, a whaling lie. [Slang.]

whaling-gang (hwāl'ing-gang), n. The crew of a whale-boat.

whaling-gun (hwāl'ing-gun), n. Any mechanical contrivance for killing whales by means of an explosive and a projectile, as the bomb-gun, swivel-gun, darting-gun, and whale-rocket.

whalingman (hwāl'ing-man), n. A whaleman.

whaling-master (hwāl'ing-mās'tēr), n. A captain of a whaling-craft, or one who is in command of a whaling-station.

whaling-port (hwāl'ing-pōrt), n. A port of entry where whaling-vessels are owned and registered.

whaling-rocket (hwāl'ing-rok'et), n. A special form of rocket used in whaling to carry a harpoon and line, and an explosive shell, into the body of a whale.

whaling-station (hwāl'ing-stā'shon), n. In shore-whaling, a place where the try-works are located. C. M. Scammon. [Western coast of U. S.]

whall (hwāl), n. See wall 3.

whallabee (hwāl'a-bē), n. Same as wallaby.

whally 1 (hwāl'i), a. [For wally: < wall 3 + -y 1]. Having a greenish tinge, as the eye in glaucoma. Compare wall-eye.

A bearded Gote, whose rugged beard And whally eyes (the signe of glosy) Was like the person selfe whom he did beare. Spenser, F. Q., I. iv. 24.

whaly (hwāl'i), a. [< whale 1 + -y 1]. Pertaining to or consisting of whales; cetaceous. [Rare.]

The ocean's monarch, whom Ioue did anoint, The great controller of the whaly rances. Tourneur, Transf. Metamorphosis, st. 39.

whame (hwām), n. [Cf. whamp.] A fly of the genus Tabanus; a breeze or burrel-fly. See breeze 1. Drum.

whammel (hwam'el), v. t. Same as whemmle.

whamp (hwomp), n. [Cf. whame and womp, dial. var. of wasp.] A wasp. [Prov. Eng.]

whampee, n. Same as wampee.

whang 1 (hwang), n. [A var. of thwang, now thong: see thong.] 1. A thong, especially a leathern thong.

He's taen four-and-twenty braid arrows, And laced them in a whang O.

Sweet Willie and Lady Margerie (Child's Ballads, II. 54).

2. A tough leather, such as is used for thongs, belt-lacing, etc. It is usually made of calf's hide, but sometimes of elskin or the hide of a dog, woodchuck, racoon, etc.

whang 2 (hwang), v. [Cf. Se. whank, beat, flog, also cut off large portions; prob. a var. of whack, confused with whang 1.] I. trans. 1. To beat or bang; thwack; whack; flog; also, to throw with violence. [Provincial or colloq.] —2. To cut in large slices or strips; slice. [Scotch.]

My uncle set it [a cheese] to his breast, And whang'd it down.

W. Beattie, Tales, p. 8. (Jamieson.)

wharf (hwārf), n.; pl. wharves, wharfs (hwārvz, hwārfs). [Early mod. E. also irreg. hwārf; < ME. wherf, a wharf, *< AS. *hwearf*, hwerf, a dam or bank to keep out water (cf. mere-hwearf, the sea-shore), = D. werf, a wharf, yard, = Icel. hvarf, a shelter, = OSw. hwarf, Sw. varf, a ship-builder's yard, = Dan. værft, a wharf, dockyard (G. werft, a wharf, werf, a bank, wharf, < D. and Dan.); prob. orig. a dam or bank to 'turn' or keep out water, and partly identical with AS. hwearf, hwerf, a turning, exchange, a space, a crowd, = OS. hwarf, a crowd, = D. werf, turn, time, = Icel. hvarf, a turning, = OSw. hwarf, turn, time, order, layer, etc., < AS. hweorfan = Icel. hverfa = OSw. hverfa, turn: see where. Cf. whirl, from the same ult. root.] 1. A platform of timber, stone, or other material built on a support at the margin of a harbor or a navigable stream, in order that vessels may be moored alongside, as for loading or unloading, or while at rest. A wharf may be parallel with and contiguous to the margin, when it is more especially called a quay; or it may project away from it, with openings underneath for the flow of water, when it is distinctively called a pier. (See cuts under pilework.) In England wharves are of two kinds: (a) legal wharves, certain wharves in all seaports appointed by commission from the Court of Exchequer, or legalized by act of Parliament; and (b) suftance wharves, places where certain goods may be landed and shipped by special suftance granted by the Crown for that purpose. In American seaports wharves generally belong to the municipality, and are often leased to their occupants, but some are private property.

The wharves stretched out towards the centre of the harbor. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

Out upon the wharfs they came, Knight and burgher, lord and dame.

Tennyson, Lady of Shalott, iv.

2†. The bank of a river, or the shore of the sea.

Duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed That roots itself in ease on Lethæ wharf.

Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 33.

wharf (hwārf), v. i. [< wharf, n.] 1. To guard or secure by a wharf or firm wall of timber or stone. Evelyn.—2. To place or lodge on a wharf.

wharfage (hwār'fāj), n. [< wharf + -age.] 1. Provision of or accommodation at wharves; berthage at a wharf: as, the city had abundant wharfage; to find wharfage for a ship.—2. Charge or payment for the use of a wharf; the charges or receipts for accommodation at a wharf or at wharves. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 135.

wharf-boat (hwār'fōt), n. 1. In the United States, a boat supporting a platform sometimes used as a wharf in rivers or in other situations where actual wharves do not exist, or where they are impracticable from the great variation in the height of the water. Floating platforms similarly supported, called floats, are used in some European and other river-ports for landing goods and passengers.

2. A boat employed about a wharf or wharves.

wharfing (hwār'fing), n. [< wharf + -ing 1.] 1. A structure in the form of a wharf; materials neighbors, being in exclamatory use equivalent to what. The earlier idiom what . . . for is now rare.

What's he for a man?

Peele, Edward I. (ed. Dyce), p. 333.

What is he for a fool that betroths himself to unquietness?
Shak., Much Ado, I. 3. 48.

Lcdy, what is the? . . .

We were leffre to beo ded

Thane iseo the make such chere.

King Horn (E. E. S.), p. 50.

What not, elliptical for what may I not say? implying 'everything else; various other things; et cetera; what you will': as, the table was loaded with toys, pictures, and what not. Hence what-not, n.

Such air is unwholesome, and engenders melancholy, plagues, and what not.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 150.

Thou art like to meet with, in the way which thou goest, . . . lions, dragons, darkness, and, in a word, death, and what not.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, I.

College A cannot compete with College B unless it has more scholarships, unless it changes the time of election to scholarships, or what not.

Contemporary Rev., LI. 617.

What of? (a) Elliptical for what comes of?—that is, what care you (I, we, etc.)? does it matter in any way?

All this is so; but what of this, my lord?

Shak., Much Ado, IV. 1. 73.

(b) Elliptical for what say or think you of?

To-day? but what of yesterday?

Tennyson, The Ancient Sage.

What's his (its) name? what do you call it? etc., colloquial phrases generally signifying that the speaker cannot supply a definite name for some person or thing, either because the name has escaped his memory, or because the person or thing is of so trivial consequence that he or it is not deserving of a specific name. The phrases are sometimes formed into a compound; as, tell Mr. What's-his-name to be off. See what-d-y-e-call-it.

Good even, good Master What-y-e-call't.

Shak., As you Like it, III. 3. 74.

What's to do here? See do!—What though? See though.

B. rel. 1. A compound relative pronoun, meaning 'that which,' or having a value including the simple relative pronoun which with the demonstrative pronoun that preceding: as, 'that which I have written I have written' (that is, that which I have written I have written). It is no longer used of persons, except in the anomalous phrase but what.

Mekli than to Mellors he munged [told] what he thought.
William of Palerne (E. E. S.), I. 2578.

Loke up, I seye, and telle me what she is

M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, vi. 5.

What, as strictly equivalent to the relative which, never had much vogue, and has long been a vulgarism; but its genitive (whose) has survived, in preference to *whic*as, as we should have modernized the medieval quihikes.

F. Hall, False Philology, p. 7, note.

What was formerly and in vulgar speech is still used as a simple relative, equivalent to that or which: as, if I had a donkey what wouldn't go.

Offer them peace or aught what is beside.

Peele, Edward I. (Old Plays, II. 37).

The matter what other men wrote.

Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 142.

I fear nothing

What can be said against me.

Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 1. 126.

What has also the value of whatever or whoever: as, come what will, I shall be there.

What in the world he is

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.

Shak., Lear, v. 3. 97.

Let come what come may, . . .

I shall have had my day.

Tennyson, Maud, xi.

2. Used adjectively, meaning 'that . . . which,' or having compound relative value: as, I know what book you mean (that is, I know that book which you mean); he makes the most of what money he has (that is, he makes the most of that money which he has): applied to persons and things. (a) That . . . who or which; those . . . who or which.

parts are variegated with blackish-brown shaft-spots and yellowish-brown edgings of the feathers, lightest on the rump; the under parts are uniform rich rufous; a long superciliary stripe, a streak below the eye and blackish auriculars, a patch on the wing, and the concealed bases of the tail-feathers are white or whitish; the eyes are brown, and the bill and feet black. The whinchat haunts lowland pastures as well as upland wastes, nests on the ground, and lays four to six greenish-blue eggs, with faint reddish-brown spots usually zoned about the larger end; it is an expert flycatcher, and also feeds largely on the destructive wire-worm. During May and June the male has a melodious song. The whinchat has an Oriental representative, P. macrorhyncha of India, and several other species are described.

The bird is commonly seen in the large gorse-coverts, from which it receives its name of Whin- or Furze-chat. H. Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I. 312.

whincow (hwin'kou), n. A bush of furze. Hallucell. [Prov. Eng.]

whindle (hwin'dl), v. i.; pret. and pp. whindled, ppr. whindling. [Also whinnel; freq. of whine.] To whimper or whine. Phillips, 1706. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

A whindling dastard. B. Jonson, Epicæne, iv. 2. To whindle or whinnel, 'to cry peevishly, to whimper' (used of a child), is very common in East Tennessee. Wright has whindle, whingel, and whinnel, all meaning to whine; so Halliwell whinnel.

Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVII. 45.

whine (hwin), v.; pret. and pp. whined, ppr. whining. whip (hwip), v.; pret. and pp. whipped, whipt, ppr. whipping. [ME. whippen, whyppen, not found in AS. (the alleged *AS. *hwecop*, a whip, **hwecopian*, whip, scourge, in Sommer, being unauthenticated); prob. a variant of wippen, < MD. wippen, shake, wag, D. wippen, skip, hasten, also give the strappado (cf. wip, a swipe, the strappado), = MLG. wippen, LG. wippen, wippen, move up and down (> G. wippen, move up and down, balance, see-saw, rock, draw up on a gibbet and drop suddenly, give the strappado), = Sw. vippa, wag, jerk, give the strappado, = Dan. vippe, see-saw, rock, bob; a secondary verb, connected with OHG. wipph, MHG. wipf, swinging, quick motion, and MHG. G. weifen, cause to swing, move, wind, or turn; causative of MHG. wîfen, swing; akin to L. vibrare, vibrate, Skt. √ vip, tremble; see vibrate. The Gael. cuip, a whip, and the W. chwip, a quick turn, chwipio, move briskly or nimbly, are prob. < E.: see quip. In defs. 7, etc., the verb is from the noun. For the change from wip (ME. wippen) to whip, cf. whap, wap<sup>1</sup>.] I. intrans. 1. To move suddenly and nimbly; start (in, out, away, etc.) with sudden quickness: as, to whip round the corner and disappear.

Whip to our tents, as roes run o'er land. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 309.

You two shall be the chorus behind the arras, and whip out between the acts and speak. B. Jonson, Epicæne, iv. 2.

I . . . saw her hold up her fan to a hackney-coach at a distance, who immediately came up to her, and she whipping into it with great nimbleness, pulled the door with a bowing mien. Steele, Spectator, No. 503.

In my wakeful mood I was a good deal annoyed by a little rabbit that kept whipping in at our dilapidated door and nibbling at our bread and hard-tack. J. Burroughs, The Century, XXXVI. 614.

She . . . whipped behind one of the large pillars, gave her dress a little shake at the sides and behind, ran her hands over her hair, and appeared before the caller cool, calm, and collected. The Century, XXXVIII. 776.

2. In angling, to cast the line or the fly by means of the rod with a motion like that of using a whip; make a cast.

There is no better sport than whipping for Bleaks in a boat in a summers evening, with a hazle top about five or six foot long, and a line twice the length of the Rod. F. Walton, Complete Angler (ed. 1653), p. 205.

II. trans. 1. To move, throw, put, pull, carry, or the like, with a sudden, quick motion; snatch: usually followed by some preposition or adverb, as away, from, in, into, off, on, out, up, etc.: as, to whip out a sword or a revolver.

I whipt me behind the arras. Shak., Much Ado, i. 3. 63.

In came Clause, The old lame beggar, and whipt up Master Goswin Under his arm, away with him. Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, v. 1.

She then whipped off her domino, and threw it over Mrs. Atkinson. Fieldding, Amelia, x. 3.

The difficult nature of the covert, and the fact that they were running in view, prevented hounds being whipped off. [Prov. Eng.] Whipped off, to drive from house to house to work, as a tailor or other workman. Compare whip, whip, and prov. Eng. and U. S.

Whip hwip, n. [ME. whippe, quippe = MD. wippe, a whip, D. wip, a swipe, strappado, moment; see whip, v.] 1. An instrument for flagellation, whether in driving animals or in punishing human beings; a scourge. In its typical form it is composed of a lash of some kind fastened upon a handle more or less rigid; the common form of horse-whip has little or no lash, being a long, tapering, and very pointed switch-like rod of wood, whalbone, or other material, usually wound or braided over with thread.

And all the folk of the Contree ryden comounly with outen Spores; but thei beren alle weys a lyttle Whippe in hire Hondes, for to chacen with hire Hors.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 249.

The dwarf . . .
Struck at him with his whip, and cut his cheek.
Tennyson, Geraint.

2. One who handles a whip, as in driving a coach or carriage; a driver: as, an expert whip.

What the devil do you do with a wig, Thomas?—none of the London whips of any degree of ton wear wigs now.
Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 1.

That is the famous coaching baronet, than whom no better whips has ever been seen upon the road.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 50.

3. A whipper-in. Specifically—(a) In hunting, the person who manages the hounds.

After these the body of the pack—the parson of the parish, and a hard riding cornet at home on leave; then the huntsman, the first whip, nearly a quorum of magistrates, etc.
White Melville, White Rose, II. xv.

(b) In English parliamentary usage, a member who performs certain non-official but important duties in looking after the interests of his party, especially the securing of the attendance of as many members as possible at important divisions: as, the Liberal whip; the Conservative whip. See the quotation.

The whip's duties are (1) to inform every member belonging to the party when an important division may be expected, and, if he sees the member in or about the House, to keep him there until the division is called; (2) to direct the members of his own party how to vote; (3) to obtain pairs for them if they cannot be present to vote; (4) to "tell," i. e., count the members in every party division; (5) to "keep touch" of opinion within the party, and convey to the leader a faithful impression of that opinion, from which the latter can judge how far he may count on the support of his whole party in any course he proposes to take.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 199.

4. A call made upon the members of a party to be in their places at a certain time: as, both parties have issued a rigorous whip in view of the expected division. [Eng.]—5. A contrivance for hoisting, consisting of a rope and pulley and usually a snatch-block, and worked by one or more horses which in hoisting walk away from the thing hoisted. In mining usually called whip-and-derry. See cut under cable-laid.—6. One of the radii or arms of a windmill, to which the sails are attached; also, the length of the arm reckoned from the shaft.

The arm, or whip, of one of the sails.
Rankine, Steam Engine, § 188.

7. In angling, the leader of an angler's cast with its flies attached. The fly at the end is the drag-fly, tail-fly, or stretcher; those above are the drop-flies, droppers, or bobbers. More fully called a whip of flies.

8. A vibrating spring used as an electric circuit-closer for testing capacity. The spring is permanently connected to one plate of the condenser or cable, and vibrates between two studs, contact with one of which closes a battery circuit, and with the other a galvanometer circuit. The condenser is thus in rapid succession charged from the battery and discharged through the galvanometer. The indications of the latter are thus proportional to the rate of vibration and the capacity of the condenser.

9. A slender rod or flexible pole used instead of stakes to mark the bounds of oyster-beds.

10. The common black swift, Cypselus apus. [Prov. Eng.]—11. A preparation of cream, eggs, etc., beaten to a froth.

There were whips, and "floating islands" and jellies to compound.
The Century, XXXVII. 841.

Crack-the-whip, sometimes up-the-whip. Six-stringed whip, or the whip with six strings, the Six Articles. See whip. Snap-the-whip, a game played in running a line. A number of persons join hands and move rapidly forward in line; those at one end stop suddenly and swing the rest sharply around; the contest is to see whether any of the outer part of the line can thus be thrown down or made to break their hold. Also called whip. To drink or lick on (upon) the whip, to have a taste of the whip; get a thrashing.

Whiphandle
In fayth and for youre long taryng
Ye shal lik on the whippe.
Touceley Mysteries, p. 30.

Comes naked neede? and chance to do amisse?
He shal be sure, to drinke upon the whippe.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber, p. 68).

Whip and spur, making use of both whip and spur in riding; hence, with the utmost haste.

Came whip and spur, and dash'd through thick and thin.
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 197.

Whip (hwip), adv. [An elliptical use of whip, v. Cf. LG. wips! quickly, = Sw. Dan. wips! pop! quick!] With a sudden change; at once; quick.

You are no sooner chose in but whip! you are as proud as the devil.
Mrs. Centlivre, Gotham Election, I. 4.

When I came, whip was the key turned upon the girls.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, VIII. 267. (Davies.)

Whip-and-derry (hwip'and-der'i), n. The simplest form of machinery, with the exception of the windlass, for hoisting. It consists of a rope passing over a pulley, and is worked by a horse or horses. It is rarely used in mining, except in very shallow mines. Sometimes called simply whip, and sometimes whipsy-derry.

Whipcan (hwip'kan), n. [whip, v., + obj. can.] A hard drinker.

He would prove an especial good fellow, and singular whip-can.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 8. (Davies.)

Whipcat (hwip'kat), n. and a. [whip, v., + obj. cat.] I. n. A tailor or other workman who "whips the cat." See to whip the cat (b), under whip. [Colloq.]

A tailor who "whipped the cat" (or went out to work at his customers' houses) would occupy a day, at easy labour, at a cost of 1s. 6d. (or less) in money, and the whipcat's meals . . . included.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 414.

II. a. Drunken.

With whip-cat bowling they kept a myrry carousing.
Stanislaus, Eneid, III.

Whip-cord (hwip'kôrd), n. 1. A strong twisted hempen cord, so called because lashes or snappers of whips are made from it.

Let's step into this shop, and buy a pennyworth of whip-cord . . . to spin my top.
Kingsley, Westward Ho, III.

2. A cord or string of catgut.

In order to produce a cord—known as whipcord—from these intestines, they are sewn together by means of the filandre before mentioned, the joints being cut aslant to make them smoother and stronger.
Spence Ence, Manuf., I. 608.

3. A seaweed, Chorda filum, having a very long, slender, whip-like frond. See Chorda, 2.—Whip-cord couching, embroidery in which a heavy whip-cord is laid upon the material and is covered by the silk couching, which is afterward sewed closely down upon the background on each side of the whip-cord, so as to leave a decided ridge.—Whip-cord willow. See willow.

Whip-cordy (hwip'kôr'di), a. [whip-cord + -y.] Like whip-cord; sinewy; muscular. [Rare.]

The bishop [of Exeter] was wonderfully hale and whip-cordy.
Bp. Wicliffe, in Life, II. 336. (Encyc. Diet.)

Whip-crane (hwip'krân), n. A simple and rapid-working form of crane, used in unloading vessels. E. H. Knight.

Whip-crop (hwip'krop), n. A name given to the whitebeam (Pyrus Aria), to the wayfaring-tree (Viburnum Lantana), and to the guelder-rose (V. Opulus), from the use of their stems for whip-stocks. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

Whip-fish (hwip'fish), n. A chaetodont fish, Heniochus macrolepidotus, having one of the spines of the dorsal fin produced into a long filament like a whip-lash.

Whip-gin (hwip'jin), n. A simple tackle-block with a hoisting-rope running over it: same as gin-block.

Whip-graft (hwip'gráft), v. t. To graft by cutting the scion and stock in a sloping direction, so as to fit each other, and by inserting a tongue on the scion into a slit in the stock.

Whip-grass (hwip'grás), n. An American species of nut-grass, Scleria triglomerata.

Whip-hand (hwip'hand), n. 1. The hand that holds the whip in riding or driving—that is, the right hand.

Mr. Tulliver was a peremptory man, and, as he said, would never let anybody get hold of his whip-hand.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 5.

2. An advantage, or advantageous position.

The archangel . . . has the whip-hand of her. Dryden.

Now, what say you, Mr. Flamefire? I shall have the whiphand of you presently.
Vanbrugh, Esop, v. 1.

whippetree (hwip'l-trē), n. Same as whiffletree.

whippoorwill (hwip'pōr-wil'), n. [Formerly also whippowill (cf. poor-will); an imitative word, from the sound or cry made by the bird, as if 'whip poor Will.' An American caprimulgine bird, Antrostomus vociferus, related to the chuck-will's-widow, A. carolinensis, and resembling the European goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus. It is 9 to 10 inches long, and 16 to 18 in extent of wings (being thus much smaller than the chuck-

Whippoorwill (Antrostomus vociferus).

will's-widow), and lacks the lateral filaments of the rictal bristles. The coloration is intimately variegated with gray, black, white, and tawny, giving a prevailing gray or neutral tone, somewhat frosted or hoary in high-plumaged males, ordinarily more brownish; there are sharp black streaks on the head and back; the wings and their coverts are barred with rufous spots; the lateral tail-feathers are black, with a large terminal area white in the male, tawny in the female; and there is a throat-bar white in the male, tawny in the female. The bill is extremely small, but the mouth is deeply cleft, and as wide from one corner to the other as the whole length of the rictus (as figured under Antrostomus). There has been some popular confusion between the whippoorwill and the night-hawk; they are not only distinct species, but belong to different genera, and their dissimilarity appears at a glance. Unlike the night-hawk, the whippoorwill is entirely nocturnal; it flies with noiseless wings, like the owl, and is often heard than seen. The notes which have given the name are trisyllabic (compare poor-will), and rapidly reiterated, with a strong accent on the last syllable; a click of the beak and some low muffled sounds may also be heard when the bird is very near. The eggs, two in number, are laid on the ground, or on a fallen log or stump, without any nest; they are creamy-white, heavily clouded and marked with brown and neutral tints, nearly equal-ended, and 1.25 by 0.90 inch in size. The young are covered with fluffy down. The whippoorwill inhabits the eastern half of the United States and British provinces; it breeds nearly throughout its range, but winters extraliminally. A western variety is sometimes specified as the Arizona whippoorwill; but the place of whippoorwills is mostly taken in the west by the poor-wills, as Nuttall's. Several other species of Antrostomus are found in Mexico and Central and South America.

The moan of the whip-poor-will from the hillside; the boding cry of the tree-toad, that harbinger of storm; the dreary hooting of the screech-owl.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 424.

whip-post† (hwip'pōst), n. Same as whipping-post.

If the stocks and whip-post cannot stay their extravagance, there remains only the jail-house.

Rev. T. Adams, Works, I, 18.

whippowill†, n. Same as whippoorwill.

This whirl-pit is said to have thrown up her wracks near Faunomenia.

whirlpool (hwér'l'pöl), n. [Early mod. E. whirl-pool, whirlpole; < whirl + pool]. 1. A circular eddy or current in a river or the sea produced by the configuration of the channel, by meeting currents, by winds meeting tides, etc. The celebrated whirlpool of Charybdis between Sicily and Italy, and the Maelstrom off the coast of Norway, are not whirlpools in the strict sense, but merely superficial commotions caused by winds meeting tidal currents, and in calm weather are free from danger. Instances of vortical motion, however, do occur, as in the whirlpool of Corryreckan in the Hebrides, between Jura and Scarba, and in some eddies among the Orkneys.

Greedy Whirl-pools, ever-wheeling round,

Suck in, at once, Oars, Sails, and Ships to ground.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Battle of Irvy.

2. Some huge sea-monster of the whale kind; a whirl-whale; a whirl-about.

The Indian Sea breedeth the most and the biggest fishes that are; among which the whales and whirlpools, called balanea, take up in length as much as four acres or arpens of land.

whirlwind (hwér'l'wind), n. [< ME. whirlewind, quirlwind, a whirling wind, = D. werrelwind = G. wirbelwind = Ice. hrifvindr = Sw. hrifvindr = Dan. hrivindr, a whirlwind; as whirl + wind, n.]. 1. A wind moving in a circumscribed circular path; a mass of air, of which the height is generally very great in comparison with its width, rotating rapidly round a vertical or slightly inclined axis, this axis having at the same time a progressive motion over the surface of the land or sea. Whirlwinds vary greatly in dimensions and intensity, the term including the miniature eddy that circles in the dusty street, the towering sand-pillars of the tropical deserts, the waterspout formed over bodies of water, and the destructive tornado of the United States. They arise when the atmosphere is in a condition of instability, and are one of the processes by which a stable condition is regained.

The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind.

Job xxxviii. 1.

2. Figuratively, any wild circling rush resembling a whirlwind.

There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelm'd

With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,

He soon discerns.

Milton, P. L., i. 77.

What a whirlwind is her head!

Byron.

The deer was flying through the park, followed by the whirlwind of hounds and hunters.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xxi.

To sow the wind and reap the whirlwind. See wind, 2.

whirly-bat (hwér'li-bat), n. Same as whirl-bat.

Very true, and he also propos'd the fighting with Whirly-bats too, and I don't like that Sport.

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, i. 84.

whirret (hwir'et), n. [Perhaps from whir.] A slap; a blow. Also written wherret, whirrit, whirrick.

And in a fume gave Furius

A whirret on the ear.

Kendall, Flowers of Epigrams (1577). (Nares.)

I forthwith went, he following me at my heels, and now then giving me a whirret on the ear, which, the way to my chamber lying through the hall where John Rauce was, he, poor man, might see and be sorry for, as I doubt not that he was, but could not help me.

T. Ellwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 222.

Then there's your source, your wherret, and your dowst, Tugs on the hair, your bob of the lips,—a whelp on't! I ne'er could find much difference.

Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iii. 2.

whirret (hwir'et), v. t. [Also wherret, etc.; cf. whirret, n.]. 1. To hurry; trouble; tease. Bickerstaff, Love in a Village, i. 5.—2. To give a box on the ear to. Beau, and Fl.

whirrick (hwir'ik), n. A variant of whirret.

Harry . . . gave master such a whirrick!

H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, i. 21. (Davies.)

whirrit, n. and v. See whirret.

whirry (hwér'i), v. [A dial. form of whir or of hurry.] I. intrans. To fly rapidly with noise; whir; hurry.

In zool.: (a) One of the long, stiff, bristly hairs which grow on the upper lip of the cat and many other animals; a vibrissa; a feeler; also, the set of such hairs on either side of the mouth. See vibrissa, and cuts under Platyrrhynchus and tiger. (b) pl. Any similar formation of hairs, feathers, etc., about an animal's mouth; also, color-marks suggestive of whiskers, as mystacial or maxillary stripes. See whiskered. (c) In entom., a long fringe of hairs on the clypeus, overhanging the mouth, as in flies of the genus Asilus.—5. The hair of the face, especially that on the sides of the face or cheeks of a man, as distinguished from that which grows on the upper lip (called the mustache) and that on the chin (called the beard), but the word was formerly also used for the hair on the upper lip: commonly in the plural. Compare side-whiskers.

His face not very great, ample forehead, yellowish reddish whiskers, which naturally turned up; below he was shaved close, except a little tip under his lip.

Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Hobbes).

His whiskers curled, and shoe-strings tied,

A new Toledo by his side.

Addison, Rosamond, ii. 2.

He had a beard too, and whiskers turned upwards on his upper-lip, as long as Baudron's.

Scott, Antiquary, ix.

The Czar's look, I own, was much brighter and briskeer,

But then he is sadly deficient in whisker.

6. In ships, an outrigger of wood or iron extending laterally from each side of the bowsprit-cap, serving to support the jib and flying-jib guys.—

7. Something great or extraordinary; a whopper; a big lie. Plantus made English (1694), p. 9. (Davies).—8. A blusterer. [Scotch.]

March whisker was never a good fisher.

Scotch proverb (Ray, Proverbs (1678), p. 385).

whiskerando (hwis-ke-ran'dō), n. [So called in allusion to Don Ferolo Whiskerandos, a burlesque character in Sheridan's play, "The Critic": a name formed, with a Spanish-looking termination, < whisker.] A whiskered or bearded person. [Burlesque.]

The dumpy, elderly, square-shouldered, squinting, caroty whiskerando of a warrior who was laying about him so savagely.

Thackeray, Philip, xiii.

whiskerandoed (hwis-ke-ran'dōd), a. [As whiskerando + -ed]. Whiskered.

To what follies and what extravagancies would the whiskerandoed macaronies of Bond Street and St. James's proceed, if the beard once more, instead of the neck-cloth, to "make the man"! Southern, The Doctor, clvi.

whiskered (hwis'kér'd), a. [< whisker + -ed]. 1. Wearing whiskers; having whiskers, in any sense.

The whisker'd vermin race.

Grainger, Sugar Cane, ii.

Again the whiskered Spaniard all the land with terror smote.

whist<sup>2</sup> (hwist'), n. [A later form of whisk<sup>2</sup>. The change from whisk<sup>2</sup> to whist<sup>2</sup>, a word of no very obvious significance after its first application, was prob. orig. accidental, or due to an unthinking conformity to whist<sup>1</sup>. The notion that the game was called whist "because the parties playing have to be whist or silent," etymologically improbable in itself, is based on the erroneous assumption that whist is the orig. name. The rule of silence, so far as it exists, is appar. founded, however, in part on the false etymology.] A game played with cards by four persons, two of them as partners in opposition to the other two, also partners. Partnership is determined by agreement or by cutting: if by agreement, two players, one on each side, cut for deal; if by cutting, the two who cut the lowest cards are partners, and the original deal belongs to the player who cuts the lowest card. The ace is the lowest card in cutting. Previous to play, the cards (a full pack) are shuffled. The player on the right of the dealer cuts, and the dealer, beginning with the player on his left, distributes in regular order to all the players, one at a time, the cards face downward, except the last card, which he turns face upward upon the table, at his right hand, where it must remain until his turn to play. This is the trump card, and the suit to which it belongs is the trump suit; the other three suits are plain suits. The leader is the dealer's left-hand player, who begins the play by throwing one of his thirteen cards face upward upon the center of the table. Second hand, the leader's left-hand player, follows with a card of the same suit if he holds one; if he does not hold one, with a card of a plain suit (ascending or with a trump; third and fourth hands similarly follow; and the highest card or the highest trump played takes the trick. The trick is gathered by the partner of the winner; the four cards are made by him into a packet, and placed face downward, at his left hand, on the table. The winner becomes the leader, and the routine is continued until all the cards held are played. Tricks above six in number count a point each upon the score. The score is the record kept of the number of points made. In play the ace is highest, the king, queen, knave, 10, and 9 are also high cards, the 8 is the middle card, and the 7 and the 2 inclusive are low cards. The rank of the cards is in the above order: the queen will take the knave, the 6 will take the 5. The ace, king, queen, and knave of the trump suit are the honors. Any trump will take any plain-suit card. The usual practice is to play with two packs of cards, one of these being shuffled or "made up" by the partner of the dealer during the deal, and afterward placed by him on the left hand of the next dealer. The dealer has the privilege of shuffling before the cards are cut. The play is conducted with reference to combinations of cards held. By the system used the cards are made conversational. In English or short whist the table is complete with six candidates. When a rubber has been played by four of these (elected by cutting), the other two have right of entry. The game is of five points made by tricks and by honors as counted. Four honors held by a player, or in conjunction with his partner, count four points; three honors similarly held count two points. The winners of a game score a point (a single) if the adversaries have three or four points up; two points (a double) against one or two points up; and three points (a treble) against no score. A rubber (two games won in succession, or two won out of three) is always played. Two points for the rubber are added to the score of the rubber-winners. When three games are played, the value of the opponents' score is deducted from the winners' total. Exposed cards (cards seen when they should not be played) must be left face upward on the table, liable to an adversary's call; a card led out of turn may be called, or, instead, a card of another suit; cards played upon a trick may by any player be ordered to be placed before their respective players; a player may ask his partner if he holds a card of a suit in which he renounces; and any player may demand to see the last trick that has been turned. In American or standard whist four players form a table. These may agree upon or cut for partners. The game is of seven points, made of tricks and penalties. Credit for all points made by both sides is given, the winner of a rubber scoring the entire number of points made against the entire number made by the opponents. Cards are not called, a trick turned cannot be shown, honors are not counted, and conversation during play is not permitted. Penalties for speaking or demonstration, exposure of cards, or leading out of turn, and for revoking are payable in points after the last card of a hand is played and before the cards are cut for the next deal.

At Whist there is a constant endeavor on the part of one side to arrive at the maximum result for their hands by the use of observation, memory, inference, and judgment, their play being dependent from trick to trick on the inferred position of the unknown from observation of the known.

Also called white-mouthed snail.

white-listed (hwit'lis'ted), a. Having white stripes or lists on a darker ground (the tree in the quotation having been torn with lightning).

He raised his eyes and saw

The tree that shone white-listed thro' the gloom.

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

white-livered (hwit'liv'erd), a. Having (according to an old notion) a light-colored liver, supposed to be due to lack of bile or gall, and hence a pale look—an indication of cowardice; hence, cowardly.

For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not.

Shak., Hen. V., iii. 2. 34.

As I live, they stay not here, white-liver'd wretches!

Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, iv. 3.

When they come in swaggering company, and will pocket up anything, may they not properly be said to be white-livered?

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

whitely (hwit'li), a. [white + -ly.] White; pale.

A whitly wanton, with a velvet brow.

Shak., L. L. L., iii. 1. 198 (folio 1623).

Could I those whitely Stars go nigh

Which make the Milky-Way in Sky.

Howell, Letters, ii. 22 (song).

white-marked (hwit'märkt), a. Marked with white, as various animals.—White-marked moth, Tenocampa leucographa, a British noctuid.—White-marked tussock-moth, a common North American vapor, Orygia leucostigma. See tussock-moth, and cut under Orygia, 2.

white-mouthed (hwit'moutht), a. In conch., white-lipped.

whiten (hwit'n), v. [ME. hwinen = Ice. hvitna = Sw. hvita = Dan. hvidne, whiten, become white; as white + -en.] I. intrans. To become white; turn white; bleach: as, the sea whitens with foam.

Whiten gan the orisounte sheene

At esterward, as it is wont to done.

Chaucer, Troilus, v. 276.

Willows whiten, aspens quiver.

Tennyson, Lady of Shalott.

Fields like prairies, snow-patched, as far as you could see, with things laid out to whiten!

Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, vi.

II. trans. To make white; bleach; whiten; whitewash: as, to whiten cloth; to whiten a wall.

Drooping lilies whitened all the ground.

Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

It [the mastic] is chewed only by the Turks, especially the ladies, who use it both as an amusement and also to whiten their teeth and sweeten the breath.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 4.

The walls of Churches and rich Mens Houses are whitened with Lime, both within and without.

Dampier, Voyages, I. 140.

=Syn. Whiten, Bleach, Blanch, Etiolate. Whiten may be a general word for making white, but is chiefly used for the putting of a white coating upon a surface: as, a wall whitened by the application of lime; the sea whitened by the wind. White for whiten is old-fashioned or Biblical. Bleach and blanch express the act of making white by removal, change, or destruction of color. Bleaching is done chemically or by exposure to light and air: as, to bleach linen or bones. Bleaching is a natural process: celery and other plants are bleached or etiolated by excluding light from them; cheeks are bleached by fear, when the blood retires from their capillaries and leaves them pale. See also defs. 5 and 6 under blanch.

white-necked (hwit'nekt), a. Having a white neck: specifying various animals: as, the white-necked raven, Corvus cryptoleucus, a small raven found in western parts of the United States, having the concealed bases of the feathers of the neck fleecy-white; the white-necked or chaplain crow, Corvus scapularis; the white-necked otary, an Australian eared seal.

whitener (hwit'nér), n. [whiten + -er.] One who or that which bleaches, or makes white; especially, some chemical or other agent used for bleaching or cleaning very perfectly.

whiteness (hwit'nes), n. [ME. whytnesse, whitnesse; < white + -ness.] 1. The state of being white; white color, or freedom from any darkness or obscurity on the surface.

Says Al Kittib, they [the Moors] displayed teeth of dazzling whiteness, and their breath was as the perfume of flowers.

Irving, Granada, i.

2. Lack of color in the face; paleness, as from sickness, terror, or grief; pallor.

Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek

Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 68.

3. Purity; cleanness; freedom from stain or blemish.

I am she,

And so will bear myself, whose truth and whiteness

Shall ever stand as far from these detections

As you from duty.

Beau. and FL., Thierry and Theodoret, i. 1.

He had kept

The whiteness of his soul, and thus men o'er him wept.

Byron, Child Harold, iii. 57.

whitening (hwit'ning), n. [Verbal n. of whiten, v.] 1. The act or process of making white.

—2. In leather-manuf., the operation of cleaning and preparing the flesh side of a hide on a beam, preparatory to waxing.—3. Tin-plating. See chemical plating, under plate, v. t.—

4. Same as whiting.<sup>1</sup>

Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 3. 14.

White's thrush. A ground thrush, Georchilus... This bird was originally described... by Latham, 1801, as Phoenicurus by Holothre... a great bird in and dedicated to G. White... by some singular misapprehension... "the only known bird which is found in Europe and America and Australia alike"—the facts being (1) that various birds are so found, but... (2) that White's thrush has never been found either in America or in Australia, and has been found in Europe as an accidental visitor... (3) that the supposed White's thrush of Australia is Phoenicurus lanceolatus of Latham, and the true White's thrush, occurring as a straggler in Europe, is probably recorded as Phoenicurus lanceolatus by Latham, which is a part of the myth, which in its rounded-out form extended to America.

whitestone (hwit'stōn), n. A literal translation of the German Weissstein, the name of a rock now generally known as granulite, but sometimes called heptanite. The name Weissstein is now obsolete in Germany, and whitestone has very rarely been used by English writers on lithology.

whitetail (hwit'tail), n. [Formerly also whitew, white + tail. Cf. whiterump, whitewar.] 1. The wheatear or stonechat, Saxicola aurantia. Also whiterump, white-arse, wittol, etc. See cut under whitewar.—2. A humming-bird of the genus Trochroa (which see, with cut).—3. The white-tailed deer of North America, Cervinus virginianus: in distinction from the blacktail (C. macrotis). See white-tailed deer (under whitetail), and cut under Cervinus.

white-tailed (hwit'taild), a. Having the tail more or less completely white; noting various birds and other animals. White-tailed buzzard, Buteo albicollis, a fine large hawk of Texas and southward, having the tail and its coverts white with broad black subterminal zone, and many fine zigzag blackish lines. White-tailed deer, the common deer of North America, Cervinus virginianus, the whitetail. The tail is very long and broad, of a flattened lanceolate shape, and on the upper side concolor with the back; but it is pure white underneath, and very conspicuous when hoisted in flight. See cut under Cervinus. White-tailed eagle, Haliaeetus albicollis, the common sea-eagle or eagle of Europe, etc. White-tailed emerald, Elvira chionura, a small humming-bird, 3½ inches long, chiefly green, but with the crissal and tail feathers white, the latter tipped with black. This species inhabits the United States of Colombia (Venezuela and Guayana) and Costa Rica. A second is E. ruficapilla, little different. The feature named is unusual in this family. Compare Cochran with cut, and Urochalcus.

White-tailed gnu, Catoblepas gnu, the common gnu, in distinction from C. gorgops, whose tail is black. See cut under gnu. White-tailed godwit, Limosa uropinna, a species widely distributed, closely resembling the bar-tailed godwit. White-tailed kite, the black-shouldered kite of the United States Elanus leucurus. See cut under kite. White-tailed longspur, the black shouldered or chestnut collared longspur, Centropus ornata, a very common fringilline bird of the western parts of North America. White-tailed marlin, see marlin (b). White-tailed mole, Talpa leucura, an Indian species. White-tailed ptarmigan, Lagopus leucurus, a ptarmigan peculiar to the Rocky Mountain region of North America, in winter pure white all over, including the tail, contrary to the rule in this genus. The nearest approach to this condition is found in L. leucurus of Spitzbergen.

white-thighed (hwit'thid), a. Having the femoral region white, or having white on the thighs; as, the white-thighed colobus, Colobus vellerosus, a semnopithecoid ape of Africa.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. xii.

2. Whithersoever.

Nor let your Children go whether they will, but know whether they goe, in what company, and what they haue done, good or euill.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 64.

Thou shalt let her go whither she will. Deut. xxi. 14.

A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!

Shak., I Hen. IV., v. 3. 22.

Where has now to a considerable extent taken the place, in conversational use, of whither: thus, it would seem rather stilted to say "whither are you going?" instead of "where are you going?" Whither is still used, however, in the more elevated or serious style, or when precision is required.

Any whithert. See anywhither.

Yee haue heard that two Flemings togider

Will vndertake or they goe any whither.

Or they rise once to drinke a Ferkin full

Of good Beerekin. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 192.

Whitherward wentest thou? William Morris, Sigurd, iii.

whiting<sup>1</sup> (hwit'ing), n. [< ME. whytunge; verbaln. of white<sup>1</sup>, v.] Chalk which has been dried either in the air or in a kiln, and afterward ground, levigated, and again dried. In trade it has various names, according to the amount of labor expended on it to make it fine and free from grit, there being ordinary or commercial whiting, then Spanish white, then gilders' whiting, and finally Paris white, which is the best grade. Whiting is used in fine whitewashing, in distemper painting, cleaning plate, making putty, as an adulterant in various processes, as a base for picture-moldings, etc. Also whitering.

When the father hath gotten thousands by the sacrilegious impropriation, the son perhaps may give him [the vicar] a cow's grass, or a matter of forty shillings per annum; or bestow a little whiting on the church, and a wainscot seat for his own worship.

Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 144.

When you clean your plate, leave the whiting plainly to be seen in all the chinks, for fear your lady should not believe you had cleaned it.

Swift, Advice to Servants (Butler).

whiting<sup>2</sup> (hwit'ing), n. [< ME. whytunge (= MD. wytingh, wattingh = M.G. witink, also witik, witek); < white<sup>1</sup> + -ing<sup>3</sup>.] 1. A gadoid fish of Europe, Merlangus vulgaris, or another of this genus. It abounds on the British coast, and is highly esteemed for food. It is commonly from 12 to 18 inches long, and of one or two pounds weight, though it grows much larger. It is readily distinguished from the haddock and some other related fishes by the absence of a barbule. The flesh is of a pearly whiteness.

Whiting, Merlangus vulgaris, one sixth natural size.

And here's a chain of whittings' eyes for pearls;

A muscle-monger would have made a better.

Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iv. 1.

2. In the United States, one of several sciaenoid fishes of the genus Menticirrhus, as M. americanus. The silver whiting, or surf-whiting, is M. littoralis.—3. The silver hake, Merluccius bilinearis.—4. The menhaden.—Bermuda, bull-head, or Carolina whiting. See kingfish (a). Whiting's-eye, a wistful glance; a leer, or amorous look.

I saw her just now give him the languishing Eye, as they call it; that is, the Whiting's-Eye, of old called the Sheep's-Eye.

Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing-Master, iv. 1.

whiting-mop (hwit'ing-mop), n. [< whiting<sup>2</sup> + mop<sup>1</sup>.] 1. A young whiting.

They will swim you their measures, like whiting-mops, as if their feet were fins, and the hinges of their knees oiled.

Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 2.

2. Figuratively, a fair lass; a pretty girl.

I have a stomach, and would content myself

With this pretty whiting-mop.

Massey, Guardian, iv. 2.

1. Leather dressed with alum; white leather. See leather.

Hast thou so much moisture

In thy whit-leather hide yet that thou canst cry?

Beau. and FL., Scornful Lady, v. 1.

2. The nuchal ligament of grazing animals, as the ox, supporting the head: same as paracac. See cut under ligamentum.

whitlow (hwit'lô), n. [A corruption of whit-flaw, whiteflaw, for whickflaw, a dial. var. of quickflaw, perhaps simulating white<sup>1</sup> + low<sup>4</sup>, a fire, as if in ref. to the occasionally white appearance of such swellings, and to the inflammation.] 1. A suppurative inflammation of the deeper tissues of a finger, usually of the terminal phalanx; felon, paronychia, or paronychia.—2. An inflammatory disease of the feet in sheep. It occurs around the hoof, where an acrid matter collects, which ought to be discharged.

whitlow-grass (hwit'lô-gräs), n. Originally, either of two early-blooming little plants, Saxifraga trydactylites and Draba verna (Erophila vulgaris), regarded as curing whitlow. In later times the name has been confined to Draba verna (vernal whitlow-grass), and thence extended to the whole genus. The section Erophila, however, of this genus, to which D. verna belongs, is now separated as an independent genus. See Draba, and cut under sibbie.

whitlowwort (hwit'lô-wért), n. See Paronychia, 2 (with cut).

whitneyite (hwit'ni-it), n. [Named after J. D. Whitney, an American geologist (born 1819).] A native arsenide of copper, occurring massive, of a reddish-white color and metallic to sub-metallic luster, and found in the copper region of Lake Superior.

whitret (hwit'ret), n. [See also quhitred, quhitret, whitrack; origin uncertain. Cf. E. dial. (Cornwall) whitneck, a white-throated weasel.] A weasel. [Scotch.]

Their meat whitsul, as they call it: namely, milke, soure milke, cheese, curds, butter.

R. Carew, Survey of Cornwall, folio 66.

Whitsun (hwit'sun), a. [Formerly also Whitson, also Whisson, Wheson; < ME. whitson, wytton, whytson, whytson (= Icel. hvíta sunna), Whitsun; abbr. of Whitsunday or the common first element of Whitsunday, Whitsun-week, etc.] Of, pertaining to, or observed at Whitsuntide; following Whitsunday, or falling in Whitsun-week: generally used in composition: as, Whitsun-ale; Whitsun-Monday, etc.—Whitsun day. See Whitsunday.

Whitsun-ale (hwit'sun-äl), n. [Also Whitson-ale; < Whitsun + ale.] A festival formerly held in England at Whitsuntide by the inhabitants of the various parishes, who met generally in or near a large barn in the vicinity of the church, ate and drank, and engaged in various games and sports.

May-games, Wakes, and Whitson-ales, &c., if they be not at unseasonable hours, may justly be permitted.

Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 276.

Whitsunday (hwit'sun-dā), n. [< ME. whitsunday, whith sounday, witsonday, wisson-day, hwite sune-dai, hwite sune-dai, etc., < AS. hvíta sunnan-dæg, only in dat. case hvítan sunnan dæg (= Icel. hvítasunnudagr (cf. also hvíta-dagar, 'white days,' a name for Whitsun-week, hvíta-daga-vika, 'white days-week,' hvítasunnudags-vika, Whitsunday's week) = Norw. Kvitsundag, Whitsunday), < hwit, white, + sunnandæg, Sunday: see white<sup>1</sup> and Sunday. The name refers to the white garments (Icel. hvíta-váðir, white weeds) worn by candidates for baptism. The notion which has been current that Whitsunday is derived from the G. pŕingsten, Pentecost (see Pinkster and Pente-

Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 438.

(b) With reference to gender, who originally noted a masculine or feminine antecedent, whether human, animate, or other, the neuter being what; and whose, the possessive (genitive) of who, was also that of what, and is still correctly used of a neuter antecedent (see what). Moreover, before the appearance of the possessive his, whose place was filled by the neuter his (see he, l. c. (b)), not only were neuter objects designated in the two other cases by he and him, but who and whom were sometimes substituted for that as the nominative and objective of the neuter relative (see the quotation from Puttenham). In modern use, however, who and whom are applied regularly to persons, frequently to animals, and sometimes even to inanimate things when represented with some of the attributes of humanity, as in personification or vivid description.

=Syn. Who, which, and that agree in being relatives, and are more or less interchangeable as such; but who is used chiefly of persons (though also often of the higher animals), which almost only of animals and things (in old English also of persons), and that indifferently of either, except after a preposition, where only who or which can stand. Some recent authorities teach that only that should be used when the relative clause is limiting or defining: as, the man that runs fastest wins the race; but who or which when it is descriptive or coordinating: as, this man, who ran fastest, won the race; but, though present usage is perhaps tending in the direction of such a distinction, it neither has been nor is a rule of English speech, nor is it likely to become one, especially on account of the impossibility of setting that after a preposition; for to turn all relative clauses into the form "the house that Jack lived in" (instead of "the house in which Jack lived") would be intolerable. In good punctuation the defining relative is distinguished (as in the examples above), by never taking a comma before it, whether it be who or which or that. Wherever that could be properly used, but only there, the relative may be, and very often is, omitted altogether: thus, the house Jack built or lived in; the man (or the purpose) he built it for. The adjective clause introduced by a relative may qualify a noun in any way in which an adjective or adjective phrase, either attributive or appositional, can qualify it, and has sometimes a pregnant implication of one or another kind:
 as, why punish this man, who is innocent? i. e. seeing, or although, he is innocent (= this innocent man). But a relative is also not rarely made use of to add a coordinate statement, being equivalent to and with a following pronoun: as, I studied geometry, which I found difficult (and [I] found it difficult); I met a friend, who kindly showed me the way (and he kindly, etc.). This way of employing the relative is by some regarded as a Latinism, and condemned; it is restricted to who and which.

heal, health, healthy, and the second element of wassail: from the Scand. form (Icel. heill) are ult. E. hale<sup>2</sup>, hail<sup>2</sup>, etc. The change of initial ho- to who- was a dial. peculiarity, there being an actual change of pronunciation (hō to hwō), due to the labializing effect of the long ō; the change was reflected in the spelling, which in some words, as whole, whoop, whore, whot, came into literary use, while the orig. pronunciation with simple h remained or prevailed. In dial.
 use the who- (hwo-) thus developed was afterward reduced in some districts to wo-, as wot for whot (orig. whote) for hot (orig. hote). Whole is one of the words which the American Philological Association and the English Philologi-cal Society include in their list of spellings to be amended, recommending the restoration of the old form hole, in keeping with the derived or related holy, heal, hale<sup>2</sup>, etc. (Trans. Amer.
 Philol. Ass., 1886, p. 127.) I. a. 1. Hale;

whopper, whapper (hwop'er), n. [Cf. whop, whap, + -er. Cf. wapper.] 1. One who whops. — 2. Anything uncommonly large; applied particularly to a monstrous lie. [Colloq.]

This is a whopper that's after us.

Margat, Frank Mildmay, xx. (Davies.)

But he hardly deserves mercy, having told whoppers.

Harper's Mag., LXXII. 213.

whopping, whapping (hwop'ing), a. [Ppr. of whop, v. Cf. wapping.] Very large; thumping: as, a whopping big trout. [Colloq.]

whore (hōr), n. [With unorig. v. as in whole, etc.; < ME. hore, a harlot (not in AS.), < Icel. hōra, adulteress, = Sw. hora = Dan. hore = G. hoer = OHG. huora, huorra, MHG. huore, G. hure (Goth. hōr, f., not found, another word, kalki, being used); also in masc. form. Icel. horr = Goth. hōrs, adulterer; cf. AS. hōr, adultery (in comp. hōrcwēn, adulteress), < Icel. hōr = Sw. Dan. hor = OHG. huor, adultery; cf. MHG.

herge, f., a prostitute; OBulg. kurāva = Pol. kurica = Lith. kurea, adulteress (perhaps < Teut.). Some compare Ir. caraim, love, carā, friend, L. cārus, dear, orig. loving (see car-ess), Skt. chāru, agreeable, beautiful, etc. The word was confused or homiletically associated in early ME. with ME. hore, < AS. horu (horw-) = OS. horu, horo = OFries. hore = OHG. horo, filth, dirt. By some modern writers it has been erroneously derived from hire<sup>1</sup>, as if 'one hired', the notion really present in the equiv. L. meretrix, a prostitute (see meretrix). The vowel in this word was orig. long, and the reg. mod. form would be **hoor* (hōr), the pron. hōr instead of hōr (as given by Walker beside hōr) is prob. due to the confusion with the ME. hore, filth, and to the later confusion of the initial ho- with who-, as also in whole. The word, with its derivatives, is now avoided in polite speech; its survival in literature, so far as it survives, is due to the fact that it is a favorite word with Shakspeare (who uses it, with its derivatives, 99 times) and is common in the authorized English version of the Bible. The word in all its forms (whoredom, etc.) is generally retained in the revised version of the Old Testament, though the American revisers recommended the substitution of harlot, as less gross; in the revised version of the New Testament harlot (with fornicator for whoremonger, etc.) is substituted. A woman who prostitutes her body for hire; a prostitute; a harlot; a courtesan; a strumpet; hence, in abuse, any unchaste woman; an adulteress or fornicatress. [Now only in low use.]

Do not marry me to a whore. Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 521.

Hee wooed her and sued her his mistress to bee,

And offered rich presents to Mary Ambree. . .

"A mayden of England, sir, never will bee

The whore of a monarcke," quoth Mary Ambree.

Mary Ambree (a child's Ballads, VII. 113).

Thou know'st my Wrongs, and with what pain I wear
The Name of Whore his Preachment on me pinn'd.

J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 184.

whore (hōr), v.; pret. and pp. whored, ppr. whoring. [= G. huren = Sw. hora = Dan. hore; cf. D. hoeren; from the noun.] I. intrans. To prostitute one's body for hire; in general, to practise lewdness. Shak., Othello, v. 1. 116. [Low.]

II. trans. To corrupt by lewd intercourse. [Low.]

He that hath kill'd my king and whored my mother.

Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 64.

A Vestal ravish'd, or a Matron whor'd,

Are laudable Divisions in a Lord.

Congreve, tr. of Eleventh Satire of Juvenal.

whoredom (hōr'dum), n. [Cf. ME. horedom, hordom, < Icel. hōrdōmr = Sw. hordom = OD. hoerdom, whoredom; as whore + -dom.] Prostitution of the body for hire; in general, the practice of unlawful sexual commerce. In Scripture the term is sometimes applied metaphorically to idolatry — the desertion of the worship of the true God for the worship of idols.

Tamar . . . is with child by whoredom. Gen. xxxviii. 24.

The whole Countrie overflowed with the synne of that kinde, and noe mervell, as havinge no lawe to restrayne whoredomes, adulteries, and like vncleanes of lief.

The Company of Merchants trading to Muscovy (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 79).

whore-house (hōr'hous), n. [Cf. ME. horehous = OHG. MHG. huorhūs, G. hurenhaus = Sw. horhus = Dan. horehus; as whore + house.] A brothel; a house of ill fame. [Low.]

whoremant (hōr'mān), n. [Cf. ME. horeman, adulterer (cf. Sw. Dan. hor-karl, adulterer); < hore, adultery, + man.] An adulterer.

The bidde it hangen that he ben.

Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), i. 4072.

whoremaster (hōr'mās'tēr), n. [Early mod. E. hore-maister; < whore + master.] One who keeps or procures whores for others; a pimp; a procurer; hence, one who practises lewdness. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 516. [Low.]

whoremasterly (hōr'mās'tēr-lī), a. [Cf. whoremaster + -ly.] Having the character of a whoremaster; libidinous. [Low.]

That Greekish whoremasterly villain.

Shak., T. and C., v. 4. 7.

whoremonger (hōr'mung'gēr), n. One who has to do with whores; a fornicator. Heb. xiii. 4 [fornicator, R. V.]

whoremonging (hōr'mung'ging), n. Fornication; whoring.

Nether haue they mynde of anything elles than vpon whoremonging and other kyndes of wickednes.

J. Udall, On 2 Pet.

whore's-bird (hōrz'bērd), n. A low term of abuse.

They'd set some sturdy whore's-bird to meet me, and beat out half a dozen of my teeth.

Plautus made English (1694), p. 9. (Davies.)

Damn you altogether for a pack of whores'-birds as you are.

Graves, Spiritual Quixote, iv. 9. (Davies.)

whore's-egg (hōrz'eg), n. A sea-urchin.

whoreson (hōr'sun), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also horeson, horson; < whore + son.] I. n. A bastard: used generally in contempt, or in coarse familiarity, and without exactness of meaning. [Low.]

Well said; a merry whoreson, ha!

Shak., R. and J., iv. 4. 19.

Frog was a sly whoreson, the reverse of John.

Arbuthnot, Hist. John Bull.

II. a. Bastard-like; mean; scurvy: used in contempt, or in coarse familiarity, and applied to persons or things.

A whoreson cold, sir, a cough, sir.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 193.

The whoreson rich innkeeper of Doncaster, her father, shewed himself a rank ostler to send her up at this time a year, and by the carrier too.

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

whorish (hōr'ish), a. [Cf. whore + -ish.] Of or pertaining to whores; having the character of a whore; lewd; unchaste. Shak., T. and C., iv. 1. 63. [Low.]

Your whorish love, your drunken healths, your houts and shouts.

Marston, Antonio and Melida, I., iv. 1.

whorishly (hōr'ish-lī), adv. In a whorish or lewd manner. [Low.]

whorishness (hōr'ish-nēs), n. The character of being whorish. [Low.]

whorl (hwēr'l or hwōrl'), n. [Cf. late ME. whorle, contr. of **whorvel*, whorwhil, whorwil; cf. OD. worvel, a spindle, whirl, etc.: see whirl, and cf. wharl.] 1. In bot., a ring of organs all from the same node; a verticil. Every complete flower is externally formed of two whorls of leaves, constituting the floral envelop, or perianth; and internally of two or more other whorls of organs, constituting the organs of fructification. The term whorl by itself is generally applied to a circle of radiating leaves — an arrangement of more than two leaves around a common center, upon the same plane with one another. Also whirl. See cuts under Lavandula, Paris, and Veronica.

2. In conch., one of the turns of a spiral shell; a volution; a gyre. The last whorl, opposite the apex or nucleus, and including the aperture of the shell, is commonly distinguished as the body-whorl. See spire<sup>2</sup>, n. 2 (with cut), and cuts under univalve, Pleurotomaria, and Scalaria. Also whirl.

See what a lovely shell, . . .

Widmannstättian (wid-man-stet'i-an), a. Pertaining to Aloys Beek von Widmannstätt, of Vienna (1753-1849).—Widmannstättian figures, the name given to certain peculiar markings seen on the polished surfaces of many meteoric irons (siderolites) when these have been acted on by an acid. They were first noticed by Widmannstätt in 1808, on the Agram meteorite. The general appearance of these markings may be learned from the annexed figure, which is a copy of a photograph, of natural size, of a part of an etched section of the Laurens county (South Carolina) meteoric iron. The Widmannstättian figures are sections of planes of cleavage or of crystalline growth, along which segregation, or chemical change of some sort, has taken place, and whose form and position with reference to each other are in accordance with the laws governing the development of crystalline substances belonging to the isometric system. Reichenbach divided these figures into what he called a trias (more properly a triad)—namely, kamacite (Balkenisen), tenite (Bandeisen), and plessite (Full-eisen)—the first consisting, so far as has been as yet made out, of distinct plates of iron, with a comparatively small percentage of nickel; the second consisting of thinner plates enveloping the kamacite, and richer in nickel; and the third being a sort of ground-mass filling the cavities, and having less obvious indications of structure and generally a darker color than the others. It has frequently been stated that some meteoric irons do not exhibit the Widmannstättian figures, and that consequently their absence is not a proof of non-celestial origin; it is certain, however, that few, if any, siderolites do not show traces of some kind of structure, although investigators in this branch of science are by no means agreed as to what kind of figures are properly designated by the name Widmannstättian. A somewhat similar uncertainty prevails with regard to the figures developed by etching on the terrestrial iron of Oriskany; so that, at the present time, it cannot be said that the Widmannstättian figures furnish a positive criterion by which the authenticity of a meteoric iron may be established; yet it is certain that well-developed figures of this kind do render it highly probable that the specimen in which they are seen is extraterrestrial. A classification of meteoric irons on the basis of the different forms of figures which they exhibit, in the present condition of this branch of science, does not seem to be justifiable, although this has been attempted.

widow<sup>1</sup> (wid'ō), n. [Formerly also widdow; < ME. widewe, widewe, widwe, widue, wodewe (pl. widewen, widous), < AS. widewe, widewe, widuwa, widwe, widwe, weduwe = OS. widuwa, widowa, widwa = OFries. widwe = D. widuwe = LG. wedewe = OHG. witawa (witawa), MHG. witwe, witwe, G. witwe = Goth. widuwo, widuwo = W. gueddo = OPruss. widewu = OBalg. widowa = Russ. widwa = L. vidua (> It. vedova = Sp. viuda = Pg. viuva = Pr. veuva = F. veuve) = Pers. biva = Skt. vidhava, a widow; cf. Gr. ἡθεος, unmarried. The word is usually explained, from the Skt., as 'without a husband,' as if Skt. rathava were < ra, without, + dhava, husband; but it is more prob. derived from the root (Skt.) rudh, lack. The L. viduus, lacking, deprived of, is prob. developed from the fem. vidua, taken as adj., widowed, deprived. Similarly the words for 'widower' are derived from those for 'widow.' From L. viduus are ult. E. void, avoid, etc.] 1. A woman who has lost her husband by death. In the early church, widows formed a separate class or order, whose duties were devotion and the care of the orphans, the sick, and prisoners.

3. Wish; request; command.

Tell me now, Mr. Acres, in case of an accident, is there any little will or commission I could execute for you?

Sheridan, The Rivals, v. 3.

4. Expressed wish with regard to the disposal of one's property, or the like, after death; the document containing such expression of one's wishes; especially, in law, the legal declaration of a person's intentions, to take effect after his death. The essential distinction between a will and any other instrument or provision contingent upon death is that a will has no effect whatever until death, and may be freely revoked meanwhile; but a deed which may create or convey an estate in the event of death must take effect as binding the grantor in his life-time. In English law the word will was originally used only of a disposition of real property to take effect at death, the word testament being then used, as in the Roman and civil law, of a disposition of personal property; hence the phrase, now redundant, last will and testament. In modern usage the term will does not necessarily imply an actual disposition of property; for an instrument, executed with the formalities required by law, in which the testator merely appoints a guardian for his child, or merely nominates an executor, leaving the assets to be distributed by the executor among those who would take by law, is a will. In respect of form, that which distinguishes a written will from other instruments consists in the ceremonies which the law requires for a valid execution, for the sake of guarding against mistake, fraud, and undue influence. Nuncupative wills, however, are not subject to these rules. These formalities are generally four: (1) The testator must subscribe at the end or foot of the writing. (2) He must do so in the presence of witnesses. In some jurisdictions three are required. In some jurisdictions it is enough that he acknowledge to the witnesses that the subscription he has previously made is his. (3) He must at the same time publish the will—that is, declare to the witnesses that it is his will. (4) They must thereafter in his presence and at his request, and in the presence of one another, subscribe their names as witnesses. In some jurisdictions a seal is necessary with the testator's signature. One whose testimony as a subscribing witness becomes necessary to prove it can take no gift by the will.

After Christ had made his will at this supper, and given strength to his will by his death, and proved his will by his resurrection, and left the church possessed of his estate by his ascension, . . . he poured out his legacy of knowledge.

Donne, Sermons, xxviii.

Her last will Shall never be digressed from.

Ford, Broken Heart, v. 3.

O lead me gently up yon hill,

And I'll there sit down, and make my will.

The Cruel Brother (Child's Ballads, II. 255).

5. Discretion; free or arbitrary disposal; sufferance; mercy.

ge ar welcum to welde as yow lykez,

That here is, al is yowre awen, to haue at yowre wille & welde.

Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 836.

Sir R. Guyllforde, Pylgrimage, p. 68.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.

Ps. xviii. 12.

The Prince was so devout and humble that he submitted his Body to be chastised at the Will of Dunstan Abbot of Glasterbury.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 11.

6. The faculty of conscious, and especially of deliberate, action. The will should not be confused (as it is, however, by different writers) with self-control, desire, choice, or attention, although the first and last of these are special modes of volition. Nor is "willing" a table to move automatically across a room an act of will; for experiment shows that effort of this kind, however strenuous, fails to cause even the willer's own hand or foot to move. Normally, the consciousness of action is merged in sensations coming from the member moved; but in cases of anesthesia the agent is still aware of being in action, and even more or less of what he is doing. This consciousness always involves a sense of opposition, whether in the form of a struggle or of a triumph, or in the negative aspect of a sense of freedom. (See freedom of the will, below.) We are always aware of some resistance, be it only the inertia of our limbs. Wishing thus essentially involves perceptive sensation, the reflexio of Thomas Aquinas. (See reflexion, 7.) When the real object with which we are in relation is studied with reference to the predicates attributed to it by the senses, the result is experience; but when the predicates we are inwardly inclined to attach to it are studied out, the operation is deliberation, terminating in choice, and commonly followed by acts of will. This cognitive process is the necessary condition of self-control. By a "strong will" is sometimes, and perhaps most correctly, meant great self-control; but more usually a power of bearing down the wills of others by tiring them out and by a domination like hypnotism is intended.

Appetite is the Will's solicitor, and the Will is Appetite's controller; what we covet according to the one by the other we often reject.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. viii. § 3.

Every man is conscious of a power to determine in things which he conceives to depend upon his determination. To this power we give the name of will.

Reid, Intellectual Powers, ii. 1.

7. The act of willing; the act of determining a choice or forming a purpose; volition.

Even actual sins, committed without will,

Are neither sins nor shame—much more compell'd.

Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, iii. 2.

It is necessary to form a distinct notion of what is meant by the word Volition in order to understand the import of the word Will, for this last word properly expresses that power of the mind of which volition is the act. . . . The word will, however, is not always used in this its proper acceptance, but is frequently substituted for volition, as when I say that my hand moves in obedience to my will.

D. Stewart, Works (ed. Hamilton), VI. 345.

Antecedent will. See antecedent.—At will (at) At command; in thorough mastery.

He that can find two words of concord cannot find foure or five or sixe, vnlesse he haue his owne language at will.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 73.

(b) At pleasure; at discretion. To hold an estate at the will of another is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor. See estate at will, under estate.

ge schul wite of 3oure sone

That ge long haue for-lore leue me for sothe,

& him winne a-gen at will.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2955.

We know more from nature than we can at will communicate.

Emerson, Nature, iv.

And if we think of various sensations in parts of our bodies we can produce them at will, and can induce at our pleasure other bodily alterations through emotional excitement.

F. H. Bradley, Mind, XIII. 27.

Conjoint will, joint will, mutual wills, legal phrases often used without much discrimination. Especially—(a) A testamentary act by two persons jointly uniting in the same instrument, as their will, to take effect after the death of both. (b) A similar instrument to take effect as to each on his or her death. These two classes are more properly termed joint or conjoint. (c) Wills made in connection by two persons pursuant to a compact, binding each to the other to make the dispositions of property thus declared. (d) Wills made to bequeath the effects of the one first dying to the survivor. These two classes, and particularly the last, are more appropriately termed mutual. The legal effect of such wills is often a matter of doubt.—Factum of a will. See factum.—Freedom of the will, a mental attribute the existence of which is disputed. The phrase is taken in different senses by different thinkers. (a) The power of doing right on all occasions. (b) That freedom of which we have an immediate consciousness in action. This is, however, only the consciousness of being able to overcome some unspecified resistance to some unspecified extent, which implies and is implied in the fact of resistance, and is in fact but an aspect of the sense of action and reaction. (c) The power of acting from an inward spontaneity, not altogether dominated by motives. This is that most of the metaphysical advocates of the freedom of the will specifically contend for. It is a limitation of the action of causality, even in the material world. Some would restrict the spontaneous power of the mind to making particles serve without variation of their vis viva; but this is untenable, since the law of action and reaction, which would thus be vitiated, is far more securely proved than that of the conservation of energy, the evidence for which is imperfect, while the objections to it are weighty. It is contended on the one hand that such spontaneity is an indispensable condition of moral action; and on the other that, if it exists, it has no direct reference to moral-ity except this that, so far as a being is spontaneous in this sense, he is free from the moral law as well as from that of causation, and that there is neither sense nor justice in holding him responsible for mere sporadic effects of pure non-cause. Responsibility, it is argued, ought to imply that a man's conduct can be regulated by principles as efficient causes, and is not free from the influence of causation.

Free will, liberty; freedom; liberty as to choice in faith or conduct; also, the faculty of will as being free, or not absolutely subject to causation.

Certainly there be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief— affecting free will in thinking, as well as in acting.

Bacon, Truth (ed. 1887).

We thus, in thought, never escape determination and necessity. It will be observed that I do not consider this inability to the notion any disproof of the fact of free-will.

Sir W. Hamilton, Works, p. 611.

Good will. (a) Favor; kindness. (b) Sincerity; right intention.

Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will.

Phil. i. 15.

His willset, of his own will; voluntarily.

A thyng that no man wol, his wille, helde.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 272 (Harl. MS.).

Ill will, enmity; unfriendliness. It expresses less than malice. Compare good-will and ill-will.—Inofficious will. See inofficious.—Joint will, mutual wills. See conjoint will.—Officious will. See officious.—Register of wills. See register.—Roman will, a form of ancient Roman will which in later times was allowed in the Eastern Empire, and generally known as the Roman will, combining something of the form of the mancipatory with the efficacy of the Pretorian testament. See testament, Maine.—Simple will. See simple.—Statute of Wills, the name commonly designating a British or an American statute regulating the power to make wills; more specifically, an English statute of 1540 (superseded by the Wills Act), by which persons seized in socage were allowed to devise all their lands except to bodies corporate, and persons seized in chivalry were allowed to devise two thirds: sometimes also called the Wills Act.—Tenant at will. See tenant.—To have one's will, to obtain what is desired.—To work one's will, to do absolutely according to one's own will, wish, pleasure, or fancy; do entirely what one pleases (with something).

For tho' the Giant Ages heave the hill

And break the shore, and evermore

Make and break, and work their will, . . .

What know we greater than the soul?

Tennyson, Death of Wellington.

Wills Act, an English statute of 1837 (7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict., c. 26) which repealed the Statute of Wills, and enacted that all property may be disposed of by will. It required wills to be in writing, signed at the foot, and attested by two witnesses, and declared the effect of certain words and phrases in them. The amendment of 1852 (15 and 16 Vict., c. 24) relates to the position of the signature.—With a will, with willingness and earnestness; with all one's heart; heartily.

Mr. Herbert threw himself into the business with a will.

once supposed to be the tree, fancy associating its pendulous branches with the hanging of the harps. The cleander is sometimes selected as the tree. Compare weeping willow. Bay willow. (a) Salix pentandra, a shrub or small tree of Europe and temperate Asia, having broadly ovate or oblong leaves, which are thick, smooth, and shining, rendering it highly ornamental. See willow-herb. Bedford willow. See crack willow. Bitter willow. See purple willow. Black willow. (a) A tree of moderate size, Salix nigra, widely distributed in North America, commonly found bending over watercourses. The wood is of little value; the bark contains salicylic acid, and is a popular domestic febrifuge. See cut on preceding page. (b) The variety Scouleriana of Salix flavescens, found on the western coast of North America, a small tree with the wood light, hard, strong, and tough. (c) Same as bay willow (a). (Local, Eng.) Brittle willow. Same as crack willow. Crack willow, a tall handsome tree, Salix fragilis, so called because the twigs break easily from the branches. It is native in Europe and Asia, and is often cultivated, affording, with the closely related white willow, the best willow-timber. A hybrid, S. Russeliana, of this and the white willow is the Bedford or Leicester willow, whose bark is said to contain more tannin than oak-bark, and more salicin than most of the genus. Desert willow, a small tree of willow-like habit, Chilopsis saligna, of the Bignoniaceae, found in arid regions in the southwestern United States and northern Mexico. The flowers, borne in terminal racemes, have a funnel-form corolla swollen out above, an inch or two long, colored white and purplish; the pods resemble those of Catalpa. Diamond willow, a form of the heart-leaved willow (see below) growing on the banks of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers, having remarkable diamond-shaped scars due to the arrest of wood-growth at the base of atrophied twigs. It is made into unique canes. Dwarf gray willow. Same as sage-willow. French willow. (a) Same as diamond willow. (b) See willow-herb. Glaucous willow, the pussy-willow. Glossy willow. Same as shining willow. Goat willow, the great sallow, Salix caprea. See sallow. Golden willow or osier. See white willow. Ground willow, Salix arctica, and perhaps other dwarf northern species. See Salix. Heart-leaved willow, Salix cordata, the most widely distributed and variable American willow, a tall shrub with the leaves narrow but heart-shaped at the base. A variety, S. vestita, is the diamond willow (see above). Hedge willow, the sallow, Salix caprea. Hoop willow. Same as ring willow. Huntington willow, the white willow. Leicester willow, the crack willow. Long-leaved willow. Same as sandbar willow. Osier willow. See osier; also diamond willow, purple willow, white willow. Persian willow. See willow-herb. Prairie willow, a grassy shrub, Salix humilis, related to the sage-willow, growing 3 to 5 feet high, common on dry plains, etc., in the United States. Primrose willow. See Jussiaea. Purple willow, a shrub or small tree, Salix purpurea, found through Europe and temperate Asia. Also called bitter rose, and whipcord willow. Its bark is rich in salicin, and so bitter that it is not gnawed by animals; hence this willow is specially recommended for game-proof hedges. It is at the same time one of the best osier willows. Pussy willow. See pussy-willow. Ring or ring-leaved willow, a variety of the weeping willow with the leaves curled into rings. Rose willow. See purple willow. Rosebay willow. See willow-herb. Sage willow. See sage-willow. Sallow willow, the common sallow, Salix caprea. Sandbar willow, Salix longifolia, a small tree often forming dense clumps of great beauty on river sandbars and banks. It is very common throughout the Mississippi basin, and reaches its greatest development in northern California and Oregon. Shining willow, a river-bank shrub or small tree, Salix lucida, of North America, closely allied to the bay willow of Europe, the leaves with a long tapering point, smooth and shining on both sides. It is among the most beautiful of willows, and is becoming popular in cultivation. Silky willow. (a) The white willow. (b) Salix Sitchensis, a low much-branched tree of the Pacific coast from California northward. Swamp willow, the pussy-willow. Sweet willow, the sweetgale, Myrica Gale; also, the bay willow. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.] To wear the willow, to put on the trappings of woe for a lost lover.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 223.

Virginia or Virginian willow. See Itea. Water willow. See water-willow. Weeping willow, a large tree, Salix Babylonica, distinguished by its very long and slender pendulous branches, a native, not of Babylon, but of eastern Asia, now common in cultivation in Europe and America. Only the female plant is known in western countries, but it spreads to some extent by the drifting and rooting of its broken branches. It is considered an emblem of mourning, and is often planted in graveyards. The Kilmarnock weeping willow is a remarkable variety of the common sallow. There is an American weeping willow sold in nurseries, which is a partly pendulous form of the European purple willow. Whipcord willow. See purple willow. White willow, Salix alba, otherwise called Huntington and silky willow, perhaps the most common cultivated species, a fine tree becoming from 50 to 80 feet high, the leaves ashy-gray or silky-white on both sides. Its wood is smooth, light, soft, tough, and not subject to splintering, and is used for a great variety of purposes. It makes a good gunpowder charcoal, for which purpose it is grown in New Jersey and Delaware. The typical form is the variety S. caerulea, or blue willow. The variety S. viminalis, the golden willow or osier, with yellow twigs, is largely grown for basket-making. Whortle willow, Salix Myrsinites, a low, sometimes closely procumbent shrub, under a foot high, with small round, ovate, or lanceolate leaves, found in the mountains of the northern Old World. Willow scale. See scale. Willow span-worm, one of a number of geometrid larvæ which feed upon willow, as the pink-striped, the larva of Delphinia variolaria of the United States. Willow tussock-moth, a North American tussock moth, Orygia defuncta, whose larva seems to feed only on willow—a peculiar fact, since other tussock-moth larvæ are rather general feeders. Yellow willow, the variety vitellina of Salix alba. See white willow, above.

II. a. 1. Made of the wood of the willow; consisting of willow.—2. Of the color of the bark of young willow-wood; of a dull yellowish-green color.—Willow pattern, a design in ceramic decoration, introduced by J. Turner in his Caughley porcelain in 1780. The design is Chinese in character, but is not exactly copied from any Chinese original. It is always in blue on white or bluish-white ground.—Willow tea. See tea.

willow<sup>1</sup> (wil'ō), v. t.; pret. and pp. willowed, ppr. willowing. [< willow<sup>1</sup>, n.] To beat, as cotton, etc., with willow rods, in order to loosen it and eject the impurities; hence, to pick and clean, as any fibrous material; treat with the willow or willowing-machine.

Fine stuff, such as willowed rope.

Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 36.

willow<sup>2</sup> (wil'ō), n. [Also willy, willey; short for willow-machine or willowing-machine.] A power-machine for extracting dirt and foreign matter from hemp and flax, for cleaning cotton, and for tearing open and cleaning wool preparatory to spinning. The machines used for these different materials vary in size, but are essentially alike, and consist of a revolving cylinder armed with spikes in a cylindrical casing also armed with spikes. A part of the casing forms a grid or sieve, through which the waste falls by gravity or is drawn by a suction blast. In certain cotton manufactures it follows the opener, or is used in place of it, and is followed by the scutcher. Also called cotton-cleaning machine, deit, opening machine, willower, willowing-machine, willow-machine, and willowing-machine.

willow-beauty (wil'ō-bū'ti), n. A British geometrid moth, Bourmia rhomboidaria. willow-bee (wil'ō-bē), n. A kind of leaf-cutting bee, Megachile willughbiella (wrongly willoughbiella), which builds its cells in willows, as originally described by Francis Willughby (1671).

willow-beetle (wil'ō-bē'th), n. Any one of more than a hundred species of beetles which live upon the willow; specifically, a leaf-beetle, Phyllodecta vitellina, which damages willows in England and on the continent of Europe, its larvæ feeding on the leaves and pupating underground.

willow-cactus (wil'ō-kak'tus), n. See Rhipsalis.

willow-caterpillar (wil'ō-kat'ēr-pil-ār), n. Any one of the many different lepidopterous larvæ which feed upon the willow; specifically, the larva of the viceroy (which see).

willow-cimbex (wil'ō-sim'beks), n. A very large American saw-fly, Cimbex americana, Willow cimbex (Cimbex americana), natural size.

whose large whitish larvæ feed on the foliage of the willow, elm, birch, and linden, frequently entirely defoliating large trees. See Cimbex.

willow-curtain (wil'ō-kēr-tān), n. In hydraulic engin., a form of floating dike made of willow wands, used in western rivers in the United States as a shield against the current, and to prevent the wearing of the banks.

willow-dolerus (wil'ō-dol'e-rus), n. A small saw-fly, Dolerus arvensis, blue-black in color, found frequently on willows in the United States in May and June.

willowed (wil'ōd), a. [< willow<sup>1</sup> + -ed<sup>2</sup>.] Abounding with willows. [Rare.]

No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along thy wild and willow'd shore.

Scott, L. of L. M., iv. 1.

willow-fly (wil'ō-flī), n. A pseudoneuropterous insect of the family Perlidae; any perlid or stone-fly; especially, one whose larva is used for bait, as the yellow sally, Chloroperla viridis of England, or Nematura variegata of the same country. See cut under Perla.

willow-gall (wil'ō-gāl), n. Any one of numerous galls upon willow-shoots and -leaves, made mainly by gall-midges (Cecidomyiidae), but often by gall-making sawflies of the genera Erura and Nematus. Examples of the former are the pine-cone willow-gall of Cecidomyia strobi-loides and the cabbage-sprout willow-gall of Cecidomyia salicis brassicoides. Examples of those made by sawflies are the willow apple-gall of Nematus salicis-pomum, the willow egg-gall of Erura salicis-ovum, and the willow bud-gall of Erura salicis-nemum.

willow-garden

(wil'ō-gār'dn), n. A sportsmen's name for a swale grown with willows.

Snipe in the spring not frequently take to swampy thickets of black alder, and what are known as "willow gardens," with springy bottoms, for shelter and food.

Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 161.

willow-ground (wil'ō-ground), n. A piece of swampy land where osiers are grown for basket-making.

willow-grouse (wil'ō-grous), n. The willow-ptarmigan.

willow-herb (wil'ō-ərb), n. 1. A plant of the genus Epilobium, so named from the willow-like leaves of E. angustifolium, the great willow-herb. This is the most conspicuous species, a native of Europe, Asia, and North America, abounding especially in recent forest-clearings, hence in America also called fire-weed. It grows from 4 to 7 feet high, and bears a long raceme of showy pink-purple flowers. Other (British) names are rose-bay, bay willow, Persian, and especially French willow. E. latifolium of arctic Europe, Asia, and North America, reaching Colorado in the mountains, is a much lower plant with similar showy flowers. E. obcordatum is a beautiful dwarf species of the mountains of California. E. luteum, found from Oregon northward, is peculiar in its yellow flowers. Many species are not at all showy. The great willow-herb and others have an unofficial medicinal use. The Indian name wicup or wicopy survives in some books. See also cut under coma.

willow-lark (wil'ō-lärk), n. The sedge-warbler. Pennant, 1768. (Imp. Dict.)

willow-leaf (wil'ō-lēf), n. One of the elongated filaments of which the solar photosphere appears to be composed, especially in the neighborhood of sun-spots. The name was proposed by Nasmyth, but is no longer in general use, since as a rule the photospheric granules are not of a form to justify it.

willow-machine (wil'ō-mā-shēn'), n. Same as willow<sup>2</sup>.

willow-moth (wil'ō-môth), n. A common British noctuid moth, Caradrina quadripunctata, a pale mottled species whose caterpillar does much damage to stored grain.

willow-myrtle (wil'ō-mēr'tl), n. A myrtaceous tree with willow-like leaves, Agonis flexuosa, of western Australia, growing 40 feet high.

willow-oak (wil'ō-ōk), n. An American oak, Quercus Phellos, found from New York near the

7. To haul or hoist by or as by a winch, whim, capstan, or the like: as, to wind or warp a ship out of harbor; specifically, in mining, to raise (the produce of the mine) to the surface by means of a winding-engine; hoist. The term wind, as well as draw, is often employed in Great Britain, while hoist is generally used in the United States. In the early days of mining, ore and coal were almost exclusively raised by hand, horse, or steam-power, in buckets or kibles; at the present time, in both England and the United States, this is done by means of a winding-engine which turns a drum on which a rope (generally of steel wire) is wound and unwound, and by means of which a cage (see cage, 3 (d)) is raised or lowered, on which the loaded cars are lifted to the surface, and the empties returned to the pit-bottom. The dimensions of engines, drums, and cages in large mines are sometimes very great, as is also the velocity with which the machinery is moved. Thus, in the Monkwearmouth colliery, Durham, England, the winding-drum is 25 feet in diameter, the rope weighs 4½ tons, the cage and load 7½ tons; the vertical distance through which the cage is raised is 580 yards, and the time occupied in lifting it and discharging the cars is two minutes and four seconds.

The Hollanders . . . layd out haulers, and wound themselves out of the way of vs. Hakluyt's Voyages, iii. 710.

From the E. wind, besides the verb and the obvious derivatives or compounds, are derived window, winnow, etc.; from the L. are ult. E. vent², ventilate, ventose, etc. (see also vent¹).]*

1. Air naturally in motion at the earth's surface with any degree of velocity; a current of air as coming from a particular direction. When the air has only a slight motion, it is called a breeze; when its velocity is greater, a fresh breeze; and when it is violent, a gale, storm, or hurricane. The ultimate cause of winds is to be found in differences of atmospheric density produced by the sun in its unequal heating of different parts of the earth. These original differences of density give rise to vertical and horizontal currents of air which constitute and establish the general atmospheric circulation, and determine permanent belts of relatively high and low pressure over the earth's surface. Differences of pressure, in turn, produce their own differences of density at the earth's surface, and thereby become a secondary cause of winds. The general system of atmospheric circulation, with respect both to surface-winds and to their correlative upper currents, is described under trade-wind. In accordance with the character of their exciting cause, winds may be divided into—(1) constant, the trade-winds and anti-trade winds, which depend upon the permanent difference of temperature between the equatorial regions and higher latitudes; (2) periodic, the monsoons, and land- and sea-breezes which arise respectively from a seasonal and diurnal difference of temperature between land and sea; (3) cyclonic and anticyclonic, winds associated with or constituting progressive areas of high and low pressure, the ultimate origin of which, especially of those in high latitudes, is not satisfactorily determined; (4) whirlwinds and (certain) squalls, which arise when the air is in a condition of unstable equilibrium, and are developed as a part of the process by which stability is regained (this class includes the most violent winds, such as the tornado, and these occur when the instability is the combined effect of a high temperature and a high humidity, a condition favorable to the development of the greatest possible gradients of density, and hence of the most terrific manifestations of wind; (5) special, winds which logically belong to the preceding classes, but which by reason of special characteristics, arising frequently from local topography, have received special appellations, as the sirocco, the harmattan, the mistral, the fohn, the chinook, etc. Winds are also commonly named from the point of compass from which they blow, as a north wind, an east wind, a southwest wind. The winds were personified and worshiped as divinities by the ancients, and representations of them are frequent in ancient art, particularly in Greek sculpture and vase-painting.

And erly on the Tewysday, whiche was seynt Thomas daye, we made sayle, and passed by the costes of Slaunoy and Hystria with easy wynde.

All the three Biskainers made toward our ship, which was not circumspect to get the wind of them all.

Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 198.

To get (take) wind, to get wind of. See get. —To haul the wind. See haul. —To have a free wind. See free. —To have in the wind, to be on the scent or trail of; perceive and follow.

A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds. . . .

To save his life, he leapt into the main;

But there, alas! he could no safely find,

A pack of dog fish had him in the wind. Swift.

To have the wind of. Same as to have in the wind.

My son and I will have the wind of you.

Shak, Tit. And., iv. 2. 133.

To keep the wind. See keep. —Too near the wind, mean; stingy; cheese-paring. [Naut. slang.] —To raise the wind. See raise. —To recover the wind of. See recover.

To sail close to the wind. (a) To sail with the ship's head just so near to the wind as to fill the sails without shaking them; sail as closely against the direction of the wind as possible. (b) To border closely upon dishonesty or indecency: as, beware in dealing with him, he sails rather close to the wind. (c) See sail. —To shake a vessel in the wind. See shake. —To slip one's wind. See slip. —To sow the wind and reap the whirlwind, to act wrongly or recklessly and in time be visited with the evil effects of such conduct. Hos. viii. 7. —To take the wind out of one's sails. See sail. —To take wind, to leak out. —To touch the wind. See touch. —To whistle down the wind, to whistle for a wind. See whistle. —Wind-scale. See scale. = Syn.

1. Wind, Breeze, Gust, Flaw, Blast, Storm, Squall, Gale, Tempest, Hurricane, Tornado, Cyclone, etc. Wind is the general name for air in motion, at any rate of speed. A breeze is gentle and may be fitful; a gust is pretty strong, but especially sudden and brief; a flaw is essentially the same as gust, but may rise to the force of a squall; a blast is stronger and longer than a gust; a storm is a violent disturbance of the atmosphere, generally attended by rain, hail, or snow; a squall is a storm that begins suddenly and is soon over, perhaps consisting of a series of strong gusts; a gale is a violent and continued wind, lasting for hours or days, its strength being marked by such adjectives as stiff and hard; a tempest is the stage between a gale and a hurricane; hurricane being the name for the wind at its greatest height, which is such as to destroy buildings, uproot trees, etc. A tornado and a cyclone are by derivation storms in which the wind has a circular or rotatory movement (see def.).

wind<sup>2</sup> (wind), v. t.; pret. and pp. winded (in some uses, erroneously, winded), ppr. winding. [ME. wunden, wynden (= MD. wunden = OHG. wintōn), expose to the wind, air; < wind<sup>2</sup>, n. With reference to blowing a horn, the verb wind<sup>2</sup>, owing to the alternative (poetical) pron. wind, and prob. to some vague association of a horn as being usually curved, with the verb wind<sup>1</sup>, has been confused with the verb wind<sup>1</sup>, whence the irreg. pret. and pp. wound. It is possible, however, that the irreg. pret. and pp. wound arose out of mere conformity with the other verb, as the pret. rang, pp. rung (instead of ringed), of the verb ring<sup>2</sup>, and the pret. wore, pp. worn, of the verb wear<sup>1</sup>, arose out of conformity to similar forms of the similar verbs sing, swear, etc.] 1. To force wind through with the breath; blow; sound by blowing: as, to wind a horn: in this sense and the three following pronounced wind.

The last Miracle is the third time of Michaels winding his horse, when God shall bring forth all the Jewes. Purcharc, Pilgrimage, p. 221.

Gawain . . . raised a bugle hanging from his neck,

And winded it, and that so musically

That all the old echoes hidden in the wall

Rang out like hollow woods at hunting-tide.

Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

2. To produce (sound) by blowing through or as through a wind-instrument.

But gin ye take that bugle-horn,

And wind a blast see shrill.

Rose the Red and White Lily (Child's Ballads, V. 178).

3. To announce, signal, or direct by the blast of a horn, etc. [Rare.]

'Twas pleasure, as we look'd behind,

To see how thou the chase could'st wind,

Cheer the dark blood-hound on his way,

And with the bugle rouse the fray!

Scott, L. of L. M., v. 29.

4. To perceive or follow by the wind or scent; nose.

As when two skilful hounds the levret wind,

Or chase thro' woods obscure the trembling hind.

Pope, Iliad, x. 42.

We winded them by our noses their perfumes by trayed them. Johnson, Dryden.

5. To expose to the wind; winnow; ventilate. —6. To drive or ride hard, as a horse, so as to render sent of wind. —7. To rest, as a horse in order to let him recover wind.

windage (win'daj), n. [< wind<sup>2</sup> + -age.] 1. In gun. (a) The difference allowed between the diameter of a projectile and that of the bore of the gun from which it is to be fired, in order to allow the escape of some part of the explosive gas, and to prevent too great friction. (b) The rush or concussion of the air produced by the rapid passage of a shot.

The last shot flying so close to Captain Portar that with the windage of the bullet his very hands had almost lost the sense of feeling.

R. Pecke (Archer's Eng. Garner, I. 620).

(c) The influence of the wind in deflecting a missile, as a ball or an arrow, from its direct path, or aside from the point or object at which it is aimed; also, the amount or extent of such deflection. (d) The play between the spindle of the De Bange gas-check and its cavity in the breech-screw: it is expressed in decimal parts of an inch, and is measured by the difference between the diameters of the spindle and its cavity. —2. In surg., same as wind-contusion.

windas, windass (win'das), n. [Early mod. E. also windace, wyndace; < ME. windas, wyndas, windasse, a windlass, < MD. windas, D. windas (> OF. guindas, guyndas, F. guindas), windlaas, lit. a 'winding-beam,' = Icel. rindass, a rounded pole which can be wound round, windlass, < D. vinden = Icel. rinda, wind (= E. wind), + ass = Icel. ass, pole, main rafter, sail-yard, = Goth. ans, a beam. Hence, by confusion with windlass, the modern form windlass.] 1. Same as windlass.<sup>2</sup>

Ther may no man out of the place it dryve

For noon engyn of wyndas or polye.

Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 176.

Gete some crosse bowis, and wyndas to bynd them with, and quarrels. Paston Letters, I. 82.

2. A fanner for winnowing grain. Jamieson. [Scotch.] windbag (wind'bag), n. A bag filled with wind; hence, a person of mere words; a noisy, empty pretender. [Slang.]

windball (wind'bäl), n. 1. A ball inflated with air; a balloon.

Generally the high stile is disgraced and made foolish and ridiculous by all wordes affected, counterfeit, and puffed up, as it were a windball carrying more countenance than matter. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 165.

2. In surg., a cause of death or injury formerly supposed to lie in the passage of a projectile in close proximity to the person injured. See wind-contusion.

Where life is destroyed by the influence of the windball. J. M. Carmichael, Operative Surgery, p. 279.

wind-band (wind'band), n. 1. A company of musicians who use only or principally wind-instruments; a brass or military band. —2. The wind-instruments of an orchestra or band taken collectively. See wind<sup>2</sup>, 8. —3. A long cloud supposed to indicate stormy weather. Hall-Well. [Prov. Eng.]

wind-beam (wind'bēm), n. A beam tying together the rafters of a pitched roof: same as collar-beam.

windberry (wind'ber'i), n.; pl. windberries (-iz). The cowberry, Vaccinium Vitis-Idæa. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.] wind-bill (wind'bil), n. In Scots law, an accommodation bill. See accommodation.

wind-bore (wind'bör), n. 1. The extremity of the suction-pipe of a pump, usually covered with a perforated plate to prevent the intrusion of foreign substances. —2. In mining, same as snore-piece.

windbound (wind'bound), a. Prevented from sailing by contrary winds; detained by contrary winds: as, windbound ships.

The next day we fasted, being windbound, and could not pass the sound.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

wind-brace (wind'bras), n. See brace.<sup>1</sup> wind-break (wind'bräk), n. Something to break the force of the wind, as a hedge, a board fence, or a row of evergreen trees; any shelter from the wind.

Under the lee of some shelving bank or other wind-break. T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 176.

wind-break (wind'brak), v. t. To break the wind of. See wind-broken.

'Twould wind-break a mule to vie burdens with her. Ford.

windbroach (wind'bröch), n. The hurdy-gurdy or vielle.

Nero, a base blind fiddler, or player on that instrument which is called a windbroach.

Cromart, tr. of Rabelais, ii. 30.

For an old man to pretend to talk wisely is like a musician's endeavouring to fumble out a fine sonata upon a windbroach. Tom Brown, Works, II. 254. (Dukes.)

wind-broken (wind'brökn), p. a. Diseased in the respiratory organs; having the power of breathing impaired by chest-disease: as, a wind-broken horse. Also broken-winded.

wind-changing (wind'chän'jing), a. Changeful as the wind; fickle. [Rare.]

Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 1. 57.

wind-chart (wind'chart), n. A chart showing the wind-directions at a given time, or the directions prevailing during any period of the year over any region of the earth. Wind-charts for the ocean, of which the "Wind and Current Charts" of the British Admiralty and the "Pilot Charts" of the United States Hydrographic Office are examples, constitute an important aid to navigators.

wind-chest (wind'chest), n. In organ-building, a chest or box immediately below the pipes or reeds, from which the compressed air is admitted to them by means of valves or pallets. See organ and reed-organ.

wind-colic (wind'kol'ik), n. Intestinal pain caused by flatulence.

wind-contusion (wind'kon-tü'zhon), n. In surg., a contusion, such as rupture of the liver or concussion of the brain, unaccompanied by any external mark of violence, supposed to be produced by the air when rapidly displaced by the velocity of a projectile, as a cannon-ball. It is now, however, considered to be occasioned by the projectile itself striking the body in an oblique direction, the comparative escape of the external soft tissues being accounted for by the degree of obliquity with which the missile impinges on the elastic skin, together with the position of the internal structures injured relatively to the impingement of the ball on one side and hard resisting substances on another. Also called windage.

wind-cutter (wind'kut'er), n. In organ-building, the upper lip of the mouth of a flue-pipe, against which the stream of air impinges when the pipe is sounded.

wind-dial (wind'di'al), n. A dial showing the changes in the direction of the wind by means of an index or pointer connected with a wind-vane.

The Wind Dial lately set up at Grigsby's Coffee and Chocolate House, behind the Royal Exchange, being the first and only one in any public House in England, and having given great satisfaction to all that have seen it, and being of constant use to those that are in any wise concerned in Navigation. Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 56.

wind-dog (wind'dog), n. A name popularly applied to fragments of rainbows seen on detached clouds. Also wind-gall.

wind-dropsy (wind'drop'si), n. Emphysema; tympanites.

wind-egg (wind'eg), n. An infecund or otherwise imperfect egg, as one which will produce nothing but wind (gas); a soft-shelled egg, such as may be laid by a hen that is comparatively old or has been injured.

winder<sup>1</sup> (win'dër), n. [< wind + -er]. 1. One who winds, rolls, or coils: as, a bobbin-winder.

They consist of sewing boys, shoe-binders, winders for weavers, and girls for all kinds of sloop needlework.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 353.

2. An instrument or a machine for winding thread, etc. (a) A contrivance like a small windlass revolving a spool or reel upon which the thread is wound. (b) A large adjustable frame which can be passed through the opening of a skein and then increased in diameter so as to hold it firmly for winding off. (c) A small stick, strip, or notched slate upon which thread can be wound: a substitute for a spool or reel.

3. The key or utensil used to wind up the spring-work of a roasting-jack.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, always leave the winder sticking on the jack to fall on their heads. Swift, Advice to Servants (Cook).

4. A plant that twists itself round others. Winders and creepers; as ivy, hops. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 536.

5. A winding-step of a staircase. winder<sup>2</sup> (win'dër), n. [< wind + -er]. 1. One who winds or sounds a horn.

Winder of the horn, When snouted wind-boars routing tender corn Anger our huntsman. Keats, Endymion, i.

2 (win'dër). A blow which takes away the breath.—3. A fan. Halliwel, [Prov. Eng.]

winder<sup>2</sup> (win'dër), v. t. [< winder + -er; prob. in part a dial. corruption of *winner for winnow.] To fan; clean or winnow with a fan: as, to winder grain. Brockett, [Prov. Eng.]

windfall (wind'fâl), n. [< wind + fall]. 1. Something blown down by the wind, as fruit from a tree, or a number of trees in a forest.

When they did spread, and their boughs were become too great for their stem, they became a windfall upon the sudden.

Bacon, True Greatness of Kingdoms and Estates (ed. 1887).

She's nobbut gone int' t' orchard, to see if she can find wind-falls enough for t' make a pie or two for t' lads.

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, vi.

2. An unexpected piece of good fortune, as an unexpected legacy.

This man, who otherwise beforetime was but poor and needy, by these windfalls and unexpected cheats became very wealthy. Holland, tr. of Plutarch's Morals, p. 1237.

3. The tract of fallen trees, etc., which shows the path of a tornado.—4. A violent gust of wind rushing from coast-ranges and mountains to the sea.—5. The down-rush of air occurring on the leeward side of a hill or mountain at a distance from its base.

You shall have leaves and windfall boughs enow, Near to these woods, to roast your meat withal.

Marlowe and Nashe, Dido, Queen of Carthage, i. 1. 172.

windfallen (wind'fâ'ln), a. Blown down by the wind.

To gather windfall n sticks.

Drayton, Polyolbion, xiii. 182.

windfanner (wind'fan'ër), n. Same as wind-hover.

wind-fertilized (wind'fër'ti-lizd), a. In bot., fertilized with pollen borne by the wind, as flowers; anemophilous, as conifers, grasses, sedges, etc.

windfish (wind'fish), n. The fall-fish, or silver chub, Semotilus bullaris, the largest cyprinoid of eastern North America. See Semotilus.

wind-flower (wind'flou'ër), n. 1. A plant of the genus Anemone, chiefly the wood-anemone, A. nemorosa: so called by translation of the classic name of an anemone or other plant anciently associated with the wind. The wind-loving reputation of this plant appears to have been conferred chiefly by the name. The wind-flower is a small herb, found in Europe, northwestern Asia, and North America, bearing a whorl of three trifoliate leaves and a single delicate white or outwardly pinkish vernal flower. The American pasque-flower, A. patens, var. Nuttalliana, bears the name specifically in the western United States.

Bide thou where the poppy blows, With wind-flowers trail and fair. Byrant, Arctic Lover.

2. The marsh-gentian, Gentiana Pneumonanthe. Tricus. of Bot.

wind-furnace (wind'fër'nās), n. Any form of furnace using the natural draft of a chimney without the aid of a bellows or blower; a natural-draft furnace; a laboratory-furnace provided with a tall chimney.

The crucible is then placed in a wind-furnace, and slowly heated as long as fumes escape. Ure, Dict., IV. 553.

wind-gage (wind'gä), n. 1. An instrument for ascertaining the velocity and force of wind; an anemometer. See anemometer.—2. An apparatus or contrivance for measuring or indicating the amount of the pressure of the wind in the wind-chest of an organ.—3. Milit., a graduated attachment to the sights of a firearm or cannon by which allowance can be made, in aiming, for the effect of the wind upon the projectile.

wind-gall<sup>1</sup> (wind'gäl), n. [< wind + gall]. Distension of the synovial bursa at the fetlock-joint of the horse, such as may be felt on each side of the tendons behind the joint. Also called puff.

His horse, . . . full of windgalls, sped with spavins. Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 53.

Neither Spavin, Splinter, nor Wind gall. Etherege, She Would if She Could, ii. 2.

wind-gall<sup>2</sup> (wind'gäl), n. [< wind + gall]; as in water-gall, weather-gall.] Same as wind-dog.

"Wind-dogs," . . . fragments or pieces (as it were) of rainbows (sometimes called wind-galls) seen on detached clouds. Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 23.

wind-galled (wind'gäld), a. Having wind-galls. Did you think I was Wind-gall'd? I can sing too, if I please. Steele, Tender Husband, iii. 1.

wind-gap (wind'gap), n. See gap, 2. wind-gun (wind'gun), n. Same as air-gun.

Forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly, And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky. Pope, Dunciad, l. 181.

wind-hatch (wind'hach), n. In mining, the opening or place where ore is taken out of the earth.

windhawk (wind'hâk), n. The windhover or kestrel.

wind-herb (wind'ërb), n. See Phlomis.

wind-house (wind'hous), n. A house built partly underground to serve as a shelter or place of refuge in hurricanes.

windhover (wind'huv'ër), n. A kind of hawk, the kestrel, Falco tinnunculus or Tinnunculus alaudarius: so called from its hovering in the face of the wind. See kestrel. Also called windbiber, windenfer, windfanner, windhawk, windsucker, vanner-hawk, staniel, etc.

About as long As the wind-hover hangs in balance. Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

windily (win'di-li), adv. With high wind; in a way that betokens wind.

The stars were glittering windily even before this crimson melted out of the east.

W. C. Russell, Sailor's Sweetheart, iv.

windiness (win'di-nes), n. 1. The state of being windy or tempestuous: as, the windiness of the weather or season.—2. Flatulence.—3. Tendency to generate wind (gas): as, the windiness of vegetables.—4. Tumor; puffiness; vanity; boastfulness.

1. Curving; spiral: as, a winding stair.

The stairs are winding, having a stately route. Coryat, Crudities, I. 35.

2. Full of bends or turns: as, a winding path.

The ascent [of mount Tabor] is so easy that we rode up the north side by a winding road.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 64.

Across the court-yard, into the dark Of the winding pathway in the park, Curate and lantern disappear.

Longfellow, Baron of St. Castine.

3. Warped; twisted; bent; crooked: as, a winding surface.

winding<sup>1</sup> (win'ding), n. [< ME. wyndynge; verbal n. of wind<sup>1</sup>, v.] 1. A turn or turning; a bend; flexure; meander: as, the windings of a road or stream.

The degise, endentyng, barrynge, owndynge, palyngge, wyndynge or bendynge, and semblable wast of clooth in vanities. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

They [the ways] were wonderfull hard, all stony and full of windings. Coryat, Crudities, I. 92.

To follow the windings of this river.

Addison, Remarks on Italy (Works, ed. Bohn, I. 537).

The windings of the marge. Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

2. A twist in any surface, so that all its parts do not lie in the same plane; a casting or warping. Gwilt.—Compound winding. When the field-magnets of a dynamo are fitted with two coils, one of which is placed in circuit with the armature and external leads, while the other is connected across the terminals as a shunt, the dynamo is said to be compound wound, and the winding compound winding.—Differential winding. See differential.—In winding, warped; out of the straight: applied by joiners to a piece of wood when two of its opposite corners stand higher than the other two.—Out of winding, brought to a plane: said of a surface: a workmen's phrase.—Series winding. A dynamo is said to be series wound, or to have a series winding, when its field-magnet coil is joined in series with the armature coil.—Shunt winding. When the field-magnet coils of a dynamo are designed for, and connected as, a shunt on the armature coil, the dynamo is said to be shunt wound, and the method of winding shunt winding.

winding-engine (win'ding-en'jin), n. Any steam-motor employed to turn a drum around which a hoisting-rope is drawn; in a mine, an engine by which the ropes are wound on and unwound from the drums, for raising or lowering the bucket, kibble, or cage on which the mined material is brought to the surface. Also called drawing-engine and hoisting-engine.

windingly (win'ding-li), adv. In a winding manner; with curves, bends, or turns.

The stream that creeps Windingly by it. Keats, Endymion, i.

winding-pendant (win'ding-pen'dant), n. Naut., a pendant hooked at the fore- or main-masthead with its bight secured as far out as necessary on the foreyard or main-yard, and having a heavy tackle, called a winding-tackle, depending from its lower end, used for lifting heavy weights.

winding-rope (win'ding-röp), n. In mining, the rope which connects the cage with the drum of the winding-engine. Formerly the winding-ropes

A Wind-lift to heave up a gross Scandal.

wind-marker (wind'mär'kér), n. A movable arrow or other device for showing on a chart the direction of the wind at any point.

windmill (wind'mil), n. [ $\langle$  ME. windmille, windmelle, windmule, windmille, windmyle = D. windmolen = MHG. wintmül, G. windmühle;  $\langle$  wind<sup>2</sup> + mill<sup>1</sup>, n.] 1.

A mill or machine for grinding, pumping, or other purposes, moved by the wind; a wind-motor; any form of motor for utilizing the pressure of the wind as a motive power. Two types of machines are used, the horizontal and the vertical. The vertical motor consists essentially of a horizontal shaft called the wind-shaft, with a combination of sails or vanes fixed at the end of the shaft, and suitable gearing for conveying the motion of the wind-shaft to the pump or other machinery. The older types of windmill used four vanes or sail-frames called whips, covered with canvas, arrangements being provided for reefing the sails in high winds. To present the vanes to the wind, the whole structure or tower carrying the windmill was at first turned round by means of a long lever. Later the top of the tower, called the cap, was made movable. Windmills are now made with many wooden vanes forming a disk exposed to the winds, and fitted with automatic feathering and steering machinery, governors for regulating the speed, apparatus for closing the vanes in storms, etc. These improved windmills are chiefly of American invention, and are largely used in all parts of Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1280.

2. A visionary scheme; a vain project; a fancy; a chimera.

He lived and died with general councils in his pate, with windmills of union to concord Rome and England, England and Rome, Germany with them both.

Bp. Hackett, Abp. Williams, l. 102. (Davies.)

To fight windmills, to combat chimeras or imaginary opponents: in allusion to Don Quixote's adventure with the windmills.

windmill-cap (wind'mil-kap), n. The movable upper part of a windmill, which turns to present the sails in the direction of the wind. See windmill.

windmill-grass (wind'mil-gräs), n. A showy grass, Chloris truncata, of southeastern Australia: so named apparently from its six to ten long spreading flower-spikes.

windmill-plant (wind'mil-plant), n. Same as telegraph-plant.

... for raising the weight by being wound ... A simple form of windlass, much used Windlass.

... of wood placed horizontally, and supported at its ends by iron spindles which turn in collars or bushes inserted in what are termed the wind-frames. This large axle is provided with holes directed toward its center, in which long levers or handspikes are inserted for turning it round when the anchor is to be weighed or any purchase is required. It is furnished with pawls to prevent it from turning backward when the pressure on the handspikes is intermitted. Different arrangements of gearing are applied to a windlass to exert increased power, and steam-windlasses, in which a small steam-engine is made to heave the windlass round, have come largely into use. Compare capstan (with cut), and cut under wrench.

21. A handle by which anything is turned; specifically, a winch-like contrivance for bending the arbalest or crossbow. See crossbow.

The arbalest was a cross-bow, the windlass the machine used in bending that weapon. Scott, Ivanhoe, xxviii., note.

Differential or Chinese windlass, a windlass with a barrel differing in diameter in different parts, the rope winding upon the larger and unwinding from the smaller portion. The amount of absolute lift and of the power exerted is determined by the difference in the two diameters of the barrel.—Spanish windlass (naut.), an extemporized purchase made by winding a rope round a roller and inserting a lever in a hitch or bight of the rope. By heaving round the lever a considerable strain is produced.

windlass<sup>2</sup> (wind'las), v. [ $\langle$  windlass<sup>2</sup>, n.] I. trans. To use a windlass; raise something as by a windlass.

Let her [Truth] rest, my dear sir, at the bottom of her well; ... none of our windlassing will ever bring her up. Miss Edgeworth, Helen, xiv.

II. trans. To hoist or haul by means of a windlass.

The stern line began to draw, and the sloop was windlassed clear of the stone pile and saved.

The Century, XXXIX. 226.

windle (win'dl), n. [ $\langle$  ME. windel, as in comp. yarn-windel, a wheel on which yarn is wound,  $\langle$  AS. windel (= MD. windel, a wheel, pulley, roll, cradle, = MLG. windle, a roll, etc.),  $\langle$  windan, etc., turn, wind: see wind<sup>1</sup>, and cf. windlass<sup>1</sup>.] 1. An implement or engine for turning or winding: used in different senses locally.

To force the water ... with devise of engines and windles up to the top of the hill.

Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxxvi. 15.

Speak her fair and canny, or we will have a ravelled hasp on the yarn-windles. Scott, Pirate, v.

From a windle the thread is conducted to the quills.

S. Judd, Margaret, l. 2.

2. The windthrush or redwing, Turdus iliacus. See cut 2 under thrush<sup>1</sup>. [Devonshire, Eng.] — 3. A dry measure, equal to about 3½ Winchester bushels. The official returns for 1879 showed that it was not then entirely obsolete. It is there stated as 220 3/8 imperial bushels of wheat, 180 50 bushels of barley, or 220 62 857 bushels of beans.

80 wyndels of barley . . . £40.

H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, App., i.

windlest, n. An obsolete form of windlass<sup>2</sup>. Cotgrave.

windless (wind'les), a. [ $\langle$  wind<sup>2</sup> + -less.] 1. Free from or unaffected by wind; calm; unruffled.

A windless sea under the moon of midnight. Ruskin.

A windless, cloudless even. William Morris, Sigurd, iii.

2. Wanting wind; out of breath.

Brooding his hands and knitting a handkercher about his eyes, that he should not see, and when they had made him sure and fast, then they laid him on until they were windless. Harman, Caveat for Cursetors, p. 96.

windlestraw (win'dl-strā), n. [Also Sc. windlestrā;  $\langle$  AS. windelstreow, straw for plaiting,  $\langle$  windel, a woven basket, etc., + streow, etc., straw: see windle and straw<sup>1</sup>.] 1. The old stalk of various grasses, as the tufted hair-grass, Deschampsia (Poa) cespitosa, the dog's-tail, Cynosurus cristatus, or Apera (Aprostis) Spica-venti.

Tall spires of windlestraw

Threw their thin shadows down the rugged slope.

Shelley, Alastor.

2. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea: same as windlestraw. 3. [Local, Eng.]

windlift (wind'lift), n. [A perversion of windlass, windlesse, the second element being made to simulate lift<sup>2</sup>.] A windlass.

wind-instrument (wind'in'strō-ment), n. A musical instrument of the sound of which is produced by a stream of compressed air, usually

... of wind-instrument, the human voice, which is produced by the breath divided into two parts, the wind-instrument, including the trumpet, the organ, the flute, the horn, the English horn, etc.; and the wind-instrument, including the pipe-organ and the reed-organ, together with the bagpipe, and the reed-organ, the reed-organ.

The method of tone-production in all these instruments, except the last, is effected by the vibration induced in a stream of air by directing it against a sharp edge, as in the flute and in flue-pipes in the organ, or the vibration induced in an elastic tongue or reed in or over an orifice through which a stream of air is driven, as in the voice, the clarinet, and the reed-organ. Sometimes both methods are used in the same instrument, as in the pipe-organ.

wind-plant (wind'plant), n. The wind-flower, Anemone nemorosa. See cut under anemone.

wind-pole (wind'pöl), n. See the quotation.

Taking, with Dove, north-east and south-west (true) as the wind-poles, all intermediate directions are found to be more or less assimilated to the characteristics of those extremes, as they are nearer one or other.

wind-pox (wind'poks), n. Varicella or chicken-pox.

wind-pressure (wind'presh'ür), n. 1. The pressure of the wind on any object in its path. The pressure of the wind blowing perpendicularly on a flat surface is usually deduced from its velocity by means of the equation  $P = kAV^2$ , where  $P$  is the pressure in pounds,  $V$  the velocity in feet per second,  $A$  the area of the surface in square feet, and  $k$  a numerical constant whose value for ordinary temperatures and barometric pressures is variously given from 0.0015 to 0.0022.

2. In organ-building, the degree of compression in the compressed air in the storage-bellows and the wind-chests.

wind-pump (wind'pump), n. A pump moved by wind.

wind-record (wind'rek'örd), n. A record of wind velocities or directions; especially, a continuous registration made by an anemograph or self-recording anemometer; an anemogram.

windring (win'dring), a. [Possibly a misreading for winding or wandering.] Winding.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the windring brooks.

Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 128.

wind-rode (wind'röd), a. Naut., riding with head to wind instead of to current. Compare tide-rode.

wind-root (wind'röt), n. The pleurisy-root, Asclepias tuberosa.

wind-rose (wind'röz), n. 1. A table or diagram showing the relative frequency of winds blowing from the different points of the compass, or the relative amount of total wind-movement for each direction; also, a table or diagram showing the connection between the wind-direction and any other meteorological element: thus, a thermal wind-rose shows the average temperature prevailing with winds from different directions.—2. See rose<sup>1</sup> and Rameria.

windrow (wind'rō), n. [Also, corruptly, wind-row; < wind<sup>2</sup> + row<sup>2</sup>, n.] 1. A row or line of hay raked together for the purpose of being rolled into cocks or heaps; also, sheaves of corn set up in a row one against another in order that the wind may blow between them.—2. A row of peats set up for drying; a row of pieces of turf, sod, or sward cut in paring and burning.—3. Any similar row or formation; an extended heap, as of dust thrown up by the wind.

Each day's dust, before the next day came, was swept into windrows or whirled away altogether by intermittent gusts charging up the slope from the valley.

The Century, XXXI. 63.

4. The green border of a field, dug up in order to carry the earth to other land to mend it: so called because laid in rows and exposed to the wind. Ray, Eng. Words (1691), p. 120.

windrow (wind'rō), v. t. [< windrow, n.] To rake or put into the form of a windrow.

wind-sail (wind'säl), n. 1. A wide tube or funnel of canvas serving to convey a current of fresh air into the lower parts of a ship.—2. One of the vanes or sails of a windmill.—To trim a wind-sail, to turn the opening of the wind-sail toward the wind.

wind-scale (wind'skāl), n. A scale of wind, as a wind-scale of the weather.

wind-shake (wind'shāk), v. To shake with wind, as a wind-shake of the leaves.

wind-shaken (wind'shākēd), adj. Shaken by wind, as a wind-shaken leaf.

wind-side (wind'sīd), n. The side of a vessel or building exposed to the wind.

Windsor bean, chair, Knight, soap. See Windsor.

wind-spout (wind'spout), n. A waterspout, or a spout of wind, as a wind-spout of a storm.

wind-storm (wind'stōrm), n. A storm of wind, as a wind-storm of the sea.

windstroke (wind'strōk), n. A paralysis of the face, arms, or legs, caused by a stroke of wind.

windsucker (wind'suk'ēr), n. 1. The wind-sucker, a bird. 2. A person who sucks the wind, as a windsucker of a storm.

wind-sucking (wind'suk'ing), n. The noise made by a horse in sucking wind.

wind-swift (wind'swift), a. Swift as the wind, as a wind-swift runner.

windthrust (wind'thrush), n. The redwing, a bird.

wind-tight (wind'tīt), a. So tight as to prevent the passage of wind or air, as a wind-tight door.

wind-trunk (wind'trunk), n. In organ-building, a trunk which conducts the compressed air from the bellows to a wind-chest. See wind-chest.

wind up (wind'up), v. [Used up; see wind.] The conclusion or final adjustment and settlement of any matter, as a wind up of a business, entertainment, etc.; the closing act; the close.

windward (wind'wārd), a. and n. [From wind + ward.] 1. a. On the side toward the point from which the wind blows, as a windward shore. 2. n. The point from which the wind blows; as, to ply or sail to windward.

windward (wind'wārd), v. To blow from, as a windward wind.

wind-way (wind'wāy), n. A way of wind, as a wind-way of a storm.

wind-whistle (wind'whistle), n. A whistle of wind, as a wind-whistle of a storm.

windy (wind'y), a. 1. Full of wind, as a windy day. 2. Full of wind, as a windy person.

2. Next the wind; windward.

3. Tempestuous; boisterous; as, windy weather.

4. Exposed to or affected by the wind.

5. Wind-like; resembling the wind.

6. Tending to generate wind or gas in the stomach; flatulent; as, windy food.

7. Caused or attended by gas in the stomach or intestines.

8. Affected with flatulence; troubled with wind in the stomach or bowels.

9. Airy; unsubstantial; empty; vain.

10. Talkative; boastful; vain. [Colloq.]

windy-footed (wind'fūt'ed), a. Wind-swift; swift-footed. [Rare.]

wine (wīn), n. [From ME. win, wyn, < AS. win = OS. OFries. win = D. wijn = MLG. win = LG. win = OHG. MHG. win, G. wein, wine, = Ice. vin = Sw. Dan. vin = Goth. wein = It. Sp. vino = Port. vinho = F. vin = Slav. OBulg. Serv. vino = Bohem. vino = Pol. wino = Russ. vino = Old Fr. vin, Ir. Gael. fion, < L. vinum, wine, collectively grapes, = Gr. oivos, wine, allied to oivē, the vine; cf. L. vitis, the vine, vinca, vine, etc. From the L. vinum are also ult. E. vine, vignette, vinous, vinegar, vintage, vineyard, etc.] 1. The fermented juice of the grape or fruit of the vine, Vitis. See Vitis. Wines are distinguished practically by their color, their hardness or softness on the palate, their flavor, and their being still or effervescent. The differences in the quality of wines depend upon differences in the varieties of vine, and quite as much on the differences of the soils in which the vines are planted, in the exposure of the vineyards, in the treatment of the grapes, and in the mode of manufacturing the wines. When the grapes are just fully ripe, the wine is generally most perfect as regards strength and flavor. The leading character of wine, however, must be referred to the alcohol which it contains, and upon which its intoxicating powers principally depend. The amount of alcohol in the stronger ports and sherries as found in the market is from 16 to 25 per cent.; in ch. claret, and other light wines, from 7 per cent. Wine containing more than 13 per cent. of alcohol may be assumed to be fortified with brandy or other spirit. Among the most celebrated ancient wines were those of Lesbos and Chios of the Greeks, and the Falernian and Cereban of the Romans. Among the principal modern wines are port, sherry, Bordeaux, Burgundy, champagne, Madeira, Rhine, Moselle, Tokay, and Marsala. The principal wine-producing countries are France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Greece, Cape Colony, Australia, and the United States.

2. That men much merite can make,
For win in his head that wende.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 900.
He [tried] cansteth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth, and wine that maketh glad the heart of man.
Baechus, that first from out the purple grape Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine.
Milton, Comus, l. 47.
3. The juice, fermented or unfermented, of certain fruits or plants, prepared in imitation of wine obtained from grapes: as, gooseberry wine, raspberry wine.
Perhaps you'd like to spend a couple of shillings, or so, in a bottle of our famous wine by and by?
Dickens, David Copperfield, vi.
3. Figuratively, intoxication produced by the use of wine.
Noah awoke from his wine.

wine-colored (win'kul'örd), a. Of the color of red wine; vinaceous.

wine-conner (win'kon'ēr), n. A wine-taster; an inspector of wines. Compare alc-conner.

taster . . . A Broker for Wine-marchants, a Wine-conner.
Colgrave.

wine-cooler (win'kö'lēr), n. A vessel in which bottled wine is immersed in a cool liquid, as in water containing ice, to cool it before it is drunk. Wine-coolers for use at table are generally of a reversed conical form, and of silver, silver-plated ware, or the like.

wine-drunk† (win'drunk), a. [ME. wyn-drinke; < wine + drunk.] Drunken with wine; intoxicated.

Ne wurth thu never so wod, ne so wyn-drunk.
Rel. Antiq., I. 178.

wine-fat (win'fat), n. [< wine + fat.] The vat or vessel into which the liquor flows from a wine-press. Isa. lxiii. 2.

winefly (win'fli), n. 1. A small fly, of the genus Prophila, which lives in its earlier stages in wine, cider, and other fermented liquors, and even in strong alcohol.—2. Any one of several small flies of the genus Drosophila, which breed in decaying fruit, pomace, and mare.

wine-fountain (win'foun'tän), n. An urn-shaped vessel with cover and faucet: usually a piece of plate, as of silver or of silver-gilt, and characteristic of the eighteenth century.

wine-glass (win'gläs), n. A small drinking-glass for wine. The name is usually given to that size and shape of glass which is especially appropriated to the wine most in use; thus, in some places, the small glass for sherry will bear this name, and the others be called by special names, as claret-glass or champaigne-glass.

wineglassful (win'gläs-fül), n. As much as a wine-glass can hold; as a conventional measure, two fluidounces.

wine-grower (win'grö'ēr), n. One who owns or cultivates a vineyard where wine is produced.

wine-growing (win'grö'ing), n. The cultivation of the grape with a view to the making of wine.

wineless (win'les), a. [< wine + -less.] Lacking wine; not using, producing, or containing wine; unaccompanied by wine: as, a wineless meal.

A wineless weak wine as one may say, that either drinketh flat and hath lost the colour, or else is much delayed with water.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 560.

You will be able to pass the rest of your wineless life in ease and plenty.
Swift, To Gay, Nov. 10, 1730.

The well-known fact that wineless offerings were made to the Muses.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 3.

wine-marc (win'märk), n. In wine-manuf., the refuse matter which remains after the juice has been pressed from the fruit. See marc.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xliii. 1.

As many [grapes] as have lien among wine-marc, or the refuse of kernels and skins remaining after the presse, are hurtfull to the head.

wine-measure (win'mezh'ür), n. An old English system of measures of capacity differing from beer-measure, the gallon being about five sixths of the gallon of the latter, and containing only 231 cubic inches. It remained in use until the establishment of the imperial gallon in 1825, and its gallon is the standard of the United States. In wine-measure, 1 tun = 2 pipes = 3 puncheons = 4 hogsheads = 6 tierces; one tierce = 42 gallons; one gallon = 2 potles = 4 quarts = 8 pints. See also gill and gallon.

wine-merchant (win'mēr'chant), n. One who deals in wines and other alcoholic beverages, especially at wholesale, or in large quantities.

wine-oil (win'oil), n. The commercial name for an oil found in a peculiarly rich brandy made from the ferment and stalks left from wine-making. It has a strong flavor of cognac.

Also called cognac-oil and huile de marc.

wine-palm (win'päm), n. A palm from which palm-wine is obtained; a toddy-palm. See toddy and toddy-palm. Compare buriti.

wine-party (win'pär'ti), n. A party at which wine is a chief feature; a drinking-party.

There were young men who despised the lads who indulged in the coarse hospitalities of wine-parties, who prided themselves in giving recherché little French dinners.
Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xv.

wine-piercer (win'pēr'sēr), n. In her., a bearing representing an instrument for tapping casks. It somewhat resembles a gimlet with a heavy handle set crosswise to the shaft.

wine-press (win'pres), n. A press in which the juice is squeezed from grapes.

I have caused wine to fail from the wine-presses: none shall tread with shouting.
Jer. xlviii. 33.

wine-room (win'röm), n. 1. A room in which wine is kept or stored.—2. A room where wine is served to customers; a bar-room.

winery (win'ēr-i), n.; pl. wineries (-iz). [< wine + -ery.] An establishment for making wine.

Several large canneries have been established within ten years, as well as packing establishments for raisins, and wineries.
Appleton's Ann. Cyc., 1886, p. 186.

wine-sap (win'sap), n. A highly esteemed American apple.

wine-skin (win'skin), n. A vessel for holding wine, made of the nearly complete skin of a goat, hog, or other quadruped, with the openings of the legs, neck, etc., secured. Compare borachio, askos.

No man putteth new wine into old wine-skins: . . . but they put new wine into fresh wine-skins.
Mark ii. 22 [R. V.].

wine-sops† (win'sops), n. pl. Same as sops in wine. See sop.

Bring the Pinckes therewith many Gelliflowres sweete,
And the Cullambynes; let us haue the Wynesops.

Ancien Riede, p. 294.

wing (wing), n. [Formerly also weng; < ME. winge, wenge, also (with intrusive h) hwinge, whenge, < Icel. vængr = Sw. Dam, vinge, a wing. The AS. word for 'wing' was fether; cf. L. penna, Gr. πτερόν, wing, from the same ult. source: see feather and pen.] 1. In vertebrate zool., the fore limb, anterior extremity, or appendage of the scapular arch or shoulder-girdle, corresponding to the human arm, fitted in any way for flight or aerial locomotion; or the same limb, however rudimentary or functionless, of a member of a class of animals which ordinarily have this limb fitted for flight. That modification of a limb which makes it a wing occurs in several ways: (a) In ornith., by the reduction and consolidation of swimming under water; in some, as penguins, only for swimming, in which case the wing is flipper-like or fin-like; in some, as the ostrich, it serves only as an aid in running; in some, as the emu, cassowary, and apteryx, it is practically functionless; it appears to have been wanting in the moas; it is a weapon of offense and defense in some birds, as the swan, and others in which it is provided with a horny spur; it is terminated with a claw or claws in some birds. The principal feathers of the wing are the remiges, rowers, or flight-feathers, those which are seated upon the hand being the primaries, those of the forearm secondaries, those of the upper arm tertiaries and scapularies, those of the thumb bastard quills; the smaller feathers, overlying the bases of the remiges, are collectively known as coverts. (See cut under covert, 6.) The various shapes of birds' wings depend to some extent upon the proportions of the bones, especially those of the pinion (see Macrochires), but mainly upon the development of the flight-feathers, and the lengths of these relatively to one another. Among birds which can fly probably no one shape is sharply distinguished from all others; so that the terms in technical use are simply descriptive of size, contour, and the like, as long, short, narrow, broad (or ample), pointed, rounded, vaulted, etc., requiring no further explanation. See names of the sets of feathers used above, and phrases below. (b) In mammal, by the enormous extension of bones of the hand and fingers, upon which, and between which and the body and leg, is stretched an extension of integument, the whole limb being lengthened, as well as its terminal segment, and there being other peculiarities of osseous structure and mechanism, as the apparent absence of one of the two bones of the forearm by extreme reduction of the ulna. Such is the condition of the fore limb of bats, or Chiroptera, which alone are provided with true wings and capable of true flight; for the so-called wings of various other mammals described as "flying," as the flying-squirrel, flying-phalanger, etc., are more properly parachutes or patagia, and their flight is only a prolonged leap. See cuts under bat, flying-fox, and Pteropodidæ. (c) In herpet., by a modification of the fore limb comparable to that of a bat's, but peculiar in the enormous extension of an ulnar digit, and its connection with other digits and with the body by an expansion of the integument, as in the extinct flying reptiles, the pterodactyls. (See cut under pterodactyl.) The flying apparatus of certain recent reptiles, as the Draco volans, is a parachute, not a true wing. (d) In ichth., a mere enlargement of the pectoral fins enables some fishes to sustain a kind of flight; and, as the pectoral fins answer to the fore limbs of higher vertebrates, this case comes under the definition of a wing. See cut under flying-fish.

Wing of Bird: feathers of the wing-trait (pteryla) alars: 1, bend of the wing, or carpal angle; 2, edge of the wing; 3, wing-tip, at end of longest primary; 4-5, the pinion, borne upon the manus, consisting of ten primaries and the primary coverts, together with the alula, or bastard wing; 6, reinforcement of the wing in the middle of the posterior border of wing 2-4; 1-3-4, seven secondaries, overlaid by greater, median, and lesser rows of secondary coverts, the unshaded area forming a speculum; 4-5, three tertiaries (specialized inner secondaries); 6, root of the wing, toward the anatomical shoulder; 6-1, anterior border of the wing.

Wing of Bat: expansion of skin from the body on to elongated digits. a, shoulder; b, elbow; c, wrist; d, hind foot; 1, small free hooked thumb; 2, 3, second and third fingers, lying close together; 4, fourth finger; 5, fifth finger.

2. In entom., an expansion of the crust of an insect, sufficing for flight, or a homologous expansion, however modified in form or function, or even functionless so far as aerial locomotion is concerned. Such a formation, though a wing by analogy of function with the wing of a vertebrate, is an entirely different structure, having no homology with the fore limb of a vertebrate. It consists of a fold of integument, supported on a tubular framework of so-called nerves or veins, which may be in communica-

A wing is a river-shore for the purpose of contracting the channel. (3) A lateral extension of an abutment. (4) Wing is also one of the long narrow flat pieces of the pattern on the side of the table or board. (5) One of the two outside divisions of an army or fleet in battle-array; usually called the right wing and left wing, and distinguished by the right and left of the army.

And this nombre of folk is with outen the princypalle host, and with outen Winges ordeynd for the Bataylle. Mandeville, Travels, p. 275.

The Earl of Mar the right wing guided. Battle of Alford (Child's Ballads, VII. 239).

The defence of the artillery was committed to the left wing. Prescott, Ford, and Isaac, p. 12.

A shoulder knot or small epaulet, specifically, a projecting piece of stuff, perhaps only a raised seam or welt, worn in the sixteenth century on the shoulder, at or near the insertion of the sleeve.

I would have mine such a suit without difference, such stuff such a wing such a sleeve. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, III. 1.

(m) A strip of leather or the like attached to the skirt of the runner in a grain-mill to sweep the meal into the spout. (n) The side or displayed part of a dash-board. (o) A projecting part of a hand-sieve on each side of the central part, or bag, serving to collect the fish, and lead them into the bag. (p) A thin, broad, projecting piece on a gudgeon, to prevent it from turning in its socket.

10. A flock or company (of plover). W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 533. Angle of the wing, in ornith., the carpal angle; the bend or flexure of the wing.

See shoulder, n., 5. Anterior wings, in entom., the upper front, or fore wings, when there are two pairs; the mesothoracic wings, in any case. Bastard wing, in ornith., same as alula. See cuts there and under covert.

Bend of the wing. Same as angle of the wing. Convolute, deflexed, dentate, digitate, divergent, erect, falcate wings. See the adjectives. Dragon's wings. See dragon. Expanse or extent of wing, in zool., wing-spread. See radius, n., 2 and spread, n., 12.

False wing, in ornith., the bastard wing, alula, or alula spuria. See alula (with cut), and cut under covert. Flexure of the wing. See flexure. Folded wings. See fold, v., 1. Diphtheria, Vespa, and wasp, 1. — Gray-goose wing, a feather of a goose as used on an arrow.

Our Englishmen in fight did chuse

The gallant gray-goose wing.

True Tale of Robin Hood (Child's Ballads, V. 370).

Inferior margin of a wing, inferior surface of a wing, inferior wings. See inferior. Inner margin of the wing. See inner. Length of wing, in ornith., the shortest distance from the flexure or carpal angle to the point of the wing or wing-tip. — Metathoracic wings. See metathoracic. — On or upon the wing. (a) Flying: as, to shoot birds on the wing.

The bird

That flutters least is longest on the wing.

Cowper, Task, vi. 931.

(b) Figuratively, in motion; traveling; active; busy.

I have been, since I saw you in town, pretty much on the wing, at Hampton, Twickenham, and elsewhere. Gray, Letters, I. 369.

(c) Taking flight; departing; vanishing.

Your wits are all upon the wing, just a-going.

Vanbrugh, Confederacy, iv. 1.

Petiolate wing. See petiolate. — Plane wings. See plane. — Plicate wings. Same as folded wings. — Point of the wing, in ornith., the end of the longest primary. See wing-tip. — Posterior margin of the wing. See posterior. — Posterior wings, in entom., the under or hinder wings, when there are two pairs; the metathoracic wings, in any case. — Reversed, spurious, superior wings. See the adjectives. — Tail of the wing. See tail. — Tectiform wings, in entom., roof-shaped wings; wings held sloping like the roof of a house when the insect rests. — To clip the wings. See clip, v., 2. — To drop to wing. See drop. — To make or take wing, to fly; take flight; depart.

Light thickens; and the crow

Makes wing to the rooky wood.

Shak., Macbeth, III. 2. 61.

It is a fearful thing

To see the human soul take wing

In any shape, in any mood.

Byron, Prisoner of Chillon, viii.

Tumid wing. See tumid. — Under one's wing, under one's protection, care, or patronage: with reference to the sheltering of chickens under the wings of the hen, as in the New Testament use.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that sleepest prophetis and stonyest hen that hen sent to thee, how oft wold I gedre togidre thi soaks, as an henne gedreth togidre hir chickenys under her wings, and thou woldist nat? Wyclif, Mat. xliii. 37.

Under wings, in entom., the posterior wings, when there are two pairs, more or less overlaid by the upper wings. — Unequal wings. See unequal. — Upper wings, in entom., the anterior wings, when there are two pairs, or their equivalents, as elytra and tegmina, which overlie the posterior wings wholly or partly. — Vertical wings, in entom., wings held upright when the insect rests, as those of a butterfly; erect wings. — Wind-and-wing, the condition of a ship sailing before the wind with studding-sails on both sides; said also of fore-and-aft vessels (schooners) when they are sailing with the wind right aft, the foresail boomed out on one side, and the mainsail on the other. Also goose-winged. — Wings conjoined, in her. See col. — Wings displayed, in her., having the wings expanded: said of a bird used as a bearing.

Wing wings, v. [wing, n.] I. trans. 1. To equip with wings for flying; specifically, to feather (an arrow).

Marriage Love's object is; at whose bright eyes He lights his torches, and calls them his skies. For her he wings his shoulders.

B. Jonson, The Barrier

So the struck eagle, stretch'd upon the plain, View'd his own feather on the fatal dart, And wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in his heart.

Byron, Eng. Bards and Scotch Reviewers, l. 82.

2. Figuratively, to qualify for flight, elevation rapid motion, etc.; especially, to lend speed or celerity to.

'Foot, all this is wrong!

This wings his pursuit, and will be before me.

I am lost for ever!

Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, v. 1.

Ambition wings his spirit.

Lust's Dominion, l. 2.

3. To supply with wings or side parts, divisions or projections, as an army, a house, etc.; flank

They thus directed, we will follow

In the main battle, whose puissance on either side

Shall be well wing'd with our chiefest horse.

Shak., Rich. III. v. 3. 300.

Close to the limb of the sun, where the temperature and pressure are highest, the hydrogen is in such a state that the lines of its spectrum are widened and wing'd.

C. A. Young, The Sun, p. 197.

4. To brush or clean with a wing, usually that of a turkey.

Shut in from all the world without,

We sat the clean-wing'd hearth about.

Whittier, Snow-Bound.

5. To bear in shaft; transport on or as on wings.

I, an old turtle,

Will wing me to some wither'd bough.

Shak., W. T., v. 3. 133.

His arms and eager eyes ejecting flame,

Far wing'd before his squadron Tancred came.

Brooke, tr. of Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, III.

6. To perform or accomplish by means of wings.

This last and Godlike Act atchiev'd,

To Heav'n she wing'd her Flight.

Prior, The Viceroy, st. 44.

From Samos have I wing'd my Way.

Congreve, Semele, II. 1.

He [Rip Van Winkle] looked round, but could see nothing but a crow winging its solitary flight across the mountain.

Irring, Sketch-Book, p. 52.

7. To traverse in flight.

The crows and choughs that wing the midway air

Show scarce so gross as beetles. Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 13.

Not man alone, but all that roam the wood,

Or wing the sky, or roll along the flood.

Pope, Essay on Man, III. 120.

8. To carve, as a quail or other small bird.

Wyngs that partryche. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 265.

Good man! him list not spend his idle meals

In quinsing plovers, or in winging quails.

Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. II. 44.

9. To wound or disable in the wing, as a bird; colloquially, to wound (a person) in the arm or shoulder, or some other not vital part.

What are the odds now that he doesn't wing me? These green-horns generally hit everything but the man they aim at. Colman the Younger, Poor Gentleman, v. 3.

II. intrans. To fly; soar; travel on the wing.

We, poor unfledged,

Have never wing'd from view of the nest.

Shak., Cymbeline, III. 3. 28.

As the bird wings and sings,

Let us cry, "All good things

Are ours!"

Browning, Rabbi Ben Ezra.

wing-band (wing'band), n. Same as wing-bar.

wing-bar (wing'bär), n. A colored bar or band across a bird's wing; technically, such a band formed by the tips of the greater or median wing-coverts, or both of these, and placed between the wing-bow and the wing-bay. Such are found in uncounted different birds. See cut under solitary.

wing-bay (wing'bä), n. The plumage-marking of a bird formed by the secondary feathers of the wing, when the wing is closed and these feathers differ in color from the rest of the plumage; so called because in the black-breasted red game type of coloring this marking is of a bay color. See spectrum, 3 (b), and first cut under wing.

wing-beat (wing'bēt), n. A wing-stroke; one completed motion of the wing in the act of flying.

wing-bow (wing'bō), n. In poultry, and hence in other birds, the plumage-marking on the shoulder or bend of the wing; distinctive coloration of the lesser coverts collectively; thus, in the black-breasted red gamecock the wing-bows are crimson. See cuts under Agelæus and sea-eagle.

wing-case (wing'kas), n. The hard, horny case or cover which overlies the functional wing of many insects, especially of Coleoptera; the elytrium. In hemipterous insects the wing-cases are technically called hemelytra. Wing-cases are always the modified fore wings, when these wings are but little modified, as in orthopterous insects, they are called tegmina. See cuts under beetle, chrysalis, clavus, Coleoptera, and katydid. Also wing-cover.

wing-cell (wing'sel), n. In entom., any one of the spaces between the nerves or veins of the wing. See cuts under nervure, venation, and wing.—Didymous, petiolate, radiated wing-cells. See the adjectives.

wing-compass (wing'kum'pas), n. A compass with an arc-shaped piece which passes through the opposite leg, and is clamped by a set-screw.

wing-conch (wing'kongk), n. A wing-shell.

wing-cover (wing'kuv'er), n. In entom., same as wing-case.—Mutilated wing-covers. See mutilated.

wing-covert (wing'kuv'ert), n. In ornith., any one of the small feathers which overlie or underlie the flight-feathers of the wing; a covert of the wing. See covert, n., 6 (with cut), teatrics, and first cut under wing.—Under wing-coverts. See under.

winged (wing'ed or wing'ed), a. [< ME. winged, winged; < wing + -ed.] 1. Having or wearing wings, in any sense; as, the winged horse (Pegasus); the winged god (Mercury); a winged (feathered) arrow; a winged ship.

Steer hither, steer your winged pines,
All beaten mariners. W. Browne, Syrens' Song.

There is also a little contemptible winged creature, an inhabitant of my aerial element.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 28.

2. In her., having wings. Specifically—(a) Noting a bird when the wings are of a different tincture from the body. [Rare.] (b) Noting an object not usually having wings; as, a winged column.

3. In bot., anat., and conch., alate; alated; having a part resembling or likened to a wing; as, a winged shell or bone; a winged seed. See cuts under sphenoid, wing-shell, and wing, n., 9 (c).—4. Abounding with wings, and hence with birds; swarming with birds. [Rare.]

The wing'd air dark'd with plumes.

Milton, Comus, l. 730.

5. Moving or passing on or as on wings; swift; rapid.

Ther mighte I seen

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 2118.

Come, Tamburlaine! now what thy winged sword.

Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I, ii. 3.

With Fear oppress'd,

In winged Words he thus the Queen address'd.

Congreve, Hymn to Venus.

6. Soaring; lofty; elevated; sublime.

How winged the sentiment that virtue is to be followed for its own sake, because its essence is divine!

J. S. Harford, Michael Angelo, v.

He [Emerson] looked far away over the heads of his hearers, with a vague kind of expectation, as into some private heaven of invention, and the winged period came at last obedient to his spell.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 383.

7. Disabled in the wing; having the wing broken.

You will often recover winged birds as full of life as before the bone was broken.

Cowes, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 16.

Winged bull, an Assyrian symbol of force and domination, of frequent occurrence in ancient Assyrian architectural sculpture, in which pairs of winged human-headed bulls and lions of colossal size usually guarded the portals of Assyrian Winged Human-headed Bull.

palaces. These figures were evidently typical of the union of the greatest intellectual and physical powers. Layard.

—Winged catheter, a soft-rubber catheter from the fenestrated end of which project two processes which serve to retain the instrument after it has entered the bladder.

—Winged elm. See vahoo, 3.—Winged fly, an artificial fly with wings, used by anglers; distinguished from the palmer, which has the form of a caterpillar.—Winged horse. See Pegasus.—Winged leaf, a pinnate or pinnately divided leaf.—Winged lion. (a) See Lion of St. Mark, under lion. (b) [l. c.] See winged bull, above.—

Winged pea, a plant of the former genus Tetragonolobus, now forming a section in Lotus. The pod is four-winged.

—Winged petiole, a petiole with a thin wing-like expansion. See cuts under aspidium and Quassia.—Winged pigweed, screw, etc. See the nouns.

wingedly (wing'ed-li), adv. In a winged manner; on, with, or by wings.

Nor with aught else can our souls interknit
So wingedly. Keats, Endymion, i.

winger (wing'er), n. [< wing + -er.] 1. One who or that which wings, in any sense.—2. A small cask or tank for holding water, stowed in the wing of a ship, where the space is much reduced by the approaching lines of the hull. (See wing, n., 9 (d).) Tanks are accurately fitted to the sloping sides of the ship.

wing-feather (wing'feθ'er), n. Any feather of the wing; especially, a wing-quill, flight-feather, or remex.

wing-fish (wing'fish), n. A flying-fish; especially, a flying-gurnard; in the United States, any species of Prionotus. See cut under sea-robin.

wing-footed (wing'füt'ed), a. 1. Aliped; having winged feet; hence, rapid; swift.

Next Venus in his sphere is Maia's some.

loves messenger, wing-footed Mercury.

Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 115.

Wing-footed Time them farther off their bear.

Drayton, Polyolbion, x. 322.

2. In conch., pteropod. P. P. Carpenter.

wing-formed (wing'förm'd), a. Shaped like a wing, in any sense; aliform; alate.

wing-gudgeon (wing'gudj'on), n. A short winged shaft of metal used as a journal for wheels having wooden axles. The wing is inserted into the end of the wood, and is secured firmly by shrinking on heated bands of wrought-iron. E. H. Knight.

wing-handed (wing'-han'ded), a. Having the hands or fore limbs modified as wings; chiropterous, as a bat.

wing-leaved (wing'left), a. Having pinnate or pinnately divided leaves; as, a wing-leaved palm; contrasted with fan-leaved.

wingless (wing'les), a. [< wing + -less.] 1. Having no wings; hence, unable to fly; technically, in zool., apterous; not alate; not winged, in any sense.

Our freedom chain'd, quite wingless our desire,

In sense dark-prison'd all that ought to soar.

Young, Night Thoughts, ii. 343.

2. In ornith., specifically, having rudimentary wings, unfit for flight; impennate or squamipennate, as any ratite bird or penguin; as, the wingless kiwis (Apterygidae).

winglessness (wing'les-nes), n. The state or character of being wingless.

Winglessness occurs in other insects through other causes than those which obtain in Madeira. Nature, XLIII. 410.

winglet (wing'let), n. [< wing + -let.] A little wing. Specifically—(a) In ornith., the bastard wing, or alula. (b) In entom.: (1) The alula, a membrane under the base of the elytra of many Coleoptera.

When he took off the winglets, either wholly or partially, the buzzing ceased.

Kirby and Spence, Entomology, II. 306.

(c) The pterygium, a lateral expansion on each side of the end of the rostrum, found in many weevils.

wing-membrane (wing'mem'brän), n. The skin of the wing of a bat; the alar membrane.

wing-nervure (wing'nér'vür), n. In entom., a nervure (which see, with cut).—Uncinate wing-nervures. See uncinate.

wing-net (wing'net), n. A winged kind of stake-net, used in the St. Lawrence salmon-fishery.

wing-pad (wing'pad), n. One of the undeveloped, pad-like wings of an active pupa, as of a young grasshopper. See cut under Caloptenus.

wing-passage (wing'pas'äj), n. Naut., a passage along the sides of a ship in the hold. Thearle, Naval Arch., ¶ 154.

wing-pen (wing'pen), n. An inclosure for salt or ice in the hold of a vessel.

wing-post (wing'pöst), n. A post or messenger which travels on the wing; a carrier-pigeon. [Rare.]

Probably our English would be found as docile and ingenious as the Turkish pigeons, which carry letters from Aleppo to Babylon, if trained up accordingly. But such practices by these wing-posts would spoil many a foot-post.

Fuller, Worthies, Northamptonshire, II. 498.

wing-quill (wing'kwil), n. In ornith., one of the remiges or flight-feathers. See remex, and cuts under covert, n., 6, and wing, n., 1 (a).

wing-rail (wing'räl), n. On railways, a guard-rail at a switch. E. H. Knight.

wing-scale (wing'skäl), n. In entom., same as squamula, 1 (b).

wingseed (wing'séd), n. See Ptelea and Pterospermum.

wing-sheath (wing'shéth), n. In entom., same as elytrum, 1. Also wing-case, wing-cover.

wing-shell (wing'shel), n. 1. A gastropod of the family Strombidæ; so called from the alate lip of the aperture. See also cut under Strombus.—2. A bivalve of the family Aviculi-dæ; a hammer-oyster.—3. A pteropod or wing-snail.—4t. A wing-case or wing-cover. N. Gray.—

False wing-shells, the spout-shells or Aporrhaidæ. See cuts under Aporrhais and spout-shell.

wing-shooting (wing'shū'ting), n. The act or practice of shooting flying birds.

They [fowling-pieces] were probably intended for wing-shooting, but could not have been made until several years after the invention of the flint lock.

W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 58.

II. n. 1. A shot made at a bird on the wing.—2. One who shoots flying birds.

wing-shot (wing'shot), a. and n. I. a. 1. Shot in the wing.—2. Shot while on the wing. See wing-shooting.

II. n. 1. A shot made at a bird on the wing.—2. One who shoots flying birds.

wing-snail (wing'snäl), n. A pteropod or sea-butterfly. See cuts under Cavolinia and Pneumoderma.

wing-spread (wing'spred), n. The distance from tip to tip of the extended wings, as of a bat, bird, or insect; extent of wing; alar expanse.

wing-stopper (wing'stop'er), n. 1t. A rope having one end clenched to a cable, and the other to the ship's beam.—2. A cable-stopper used in the wings or sides of the hold in old days when rope cables were used.

wing-stroke (wing'strök), n. The stroke or sweep of the wings; a wing-beat.

wing-swift (wing'swift), a. Swift of wing; of rapid flight.

wing-tip (wing'tip), n. The point of the wing; the apex of the longest primary of a bird's wing.

This is often the end of the first primary, which may exceed in length the next one by as much as or by more than the second surpasses the third. The most pointed wings result from this conformation, and the wing is generally the more rounded the further removed the longest primary is from the first one. A sharp yet strong wing results from the greatest length of the second or third primary, supported nearly to its end by those next to it on each side; and, in general, two or three feathers, of nearly or quite equal lengths, compose the wing-tip.

wing-tract (wing'trakt), n. In ornith., the pteryla alaris; that special tract or pteryla upon which grow the feathers of the wing, excepting the scapulars (which are situated upon the humeral tract). See pteryla, and first cut under wing.

wing-transom (wing'tran'sum), n. Naut., the uppermost or longest transom in a ship. Also called main transom. See cut under transom.

wing-wale (wing'wäl), n. See wing, n., 9 (d).

wing-wall (wing'wäl), n. One of the lateral walls of an abutment, forming a support and protection to it. E. H. Knight.

wingy (wing'i), a. [< wing + -y.] 1. Having wings.

The cranes,
But, if some rushing storm the journey cross,
The wingy leaders all are at a loss.

Rowe, tr. of Lucan, v. 1029.

2. Soaring as on wings; aspiring; lofty.

As for those wingy mysteries in divinity, and airy subtleties in religion, which have unhinged the brains of better heads, they never stretched the pia mater of mine.

Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. § 9.

Youth's gallant trophies, bright
In Fancy's rainbow ray, invite His wingy nerves to climb.

Beattie, Ode to Hope, ii. 1.

3. Rapid; swift.

With wingy speed outstrip the eastern wind.

Addison, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., ii.

wink<sup>1</sup> (wink), v. [< ME. winken, wink, move the eyelids quickly (pret. wanc, wank, wonk), *< AS. *wincan* (pret. **wanc*, pp. **wuncen*); also ME. winken (pret. winkede< AS. wincian, wink; = MD. wincken, wencken = OHG. win-

Wink, v. To close and open quickly, as, to wink the eyelids or the eyes. [< wink<sup>1</sup> + -able.] Capable of being won.

All the rest are winnable.
Pall Mall Gazette, Feb. 18, 1888. (Encyc. Diet.)

winnet, n. and a. I. n. Joy; delight; pleasure.

Sche whypyth his face with her kerchy.
Conventry Mysteries, p. 318.

The large Fra Angelico in the Academy is as clear and keen as if the good old monk were standing there wiping his brushes.
H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 274.

2. To remove by or as by gently rubbing with or on something, especially a cloth; hence, with away, off, or out, to remove, efface, or obliterate.

God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Rev. xxi. 4.

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, . . .
Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 10. 74.

Why, then, should I now, now when glorious peace
Triumphs in chance of pleasures, be wiped off,
Like a useless moth, from courtly ease?

Ford, Love's Sacrifice, i. 1.

Oh, thou has nam'd a word that wipes away
All thoughts revengeful.

Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, ii. 1.

Yet here hee smoothly seeks to wipe off all the envy of his evil Government upon his Substitutes and under Officers.

Milton, Eikonoklastes, i.

3. Figuratively, to cleanse, as from evil practices or abuses; clear, as of disadvantage or superfluity.

I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish.

2 Ki. xxi. 13.

4t. To cheat; defraud; trick.

If they by covin or guile be wiped beside their goods, so that no violence be done to their bodies, they ease their anger by abstaining from occupying with that nation until they have made satisfaction.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 10.

We are but quit; you fool us of our moneys
In every cause, in every quiddit wipe us.

Fletcher, Spanish Curate v. 5.

5t. To stroke or strike gently; tap.

Thenne he toke me by the hande frome the grounde and wyped my face with a rose and kyssed me.

Joseph of Arimathea (L. E. T. S.), p. 30.

6. To beat; chastise. [Slang.]—7. In plumbing, to apply (solder) without the use of a soldering-iron, by allowing the solder to cool into a semi-fluid condition, and then applying it by wiping it over the part to be soldered by the use of a pad of leather or cloth. See wiping, 2.—To wipe another's nose. See nose 1.—To wipe the (or one's) eye. See eye 1.

II. intrans. To make strokes with a rubbing or sweeping motion.

He comes full upon it, seated upright, with its back against a tree, wiping at the dogs swarming upon it, right and left, with its huge paws.

W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 205.

wipe<sup>1</sup> (wip), n. [Early mod. E. also wippe; < wipen, v.] 1. The act or process of wiping clean or dry; a sweeping stroke of one thing over another; a rub; a brush.

He often said of himself, with a melancholy wipe of his sleeve across his brow, that he "didn't know which-a-way to turn."

George Eliot, Felix Holt, viii.

2. A quick or hard stroke; a blow, literally or figuratively; a cut: now regarded as slang.

Since you were the first that layde hand to weapon, the fault is not mine if I have happened to give you a wipe.

Dickens, Oliver Twist, ix.

5. pl. A fence of brushwood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—6. Same as wiper, 3.

As the cam, which is a revolving wheel with twelve or fourteen projecting teeth or wipes, revolves.
W. H. Greenwood, Steel and Iron, p. 308.

wiper (wip'er), n. [< wipen + -er 1.] 1. One who or that which wipes.

Another movement [of a soldering-machine] carries the can body across the wiper, which removes the superfluous solder.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LXIII. 297.

2. That on which anything is wiped, as a hand-towel or a handkerchief.

The wipers for their noses. B. Jonson, Masque of Owls.

3. In mach., a piece projecting generally from a horizontal axle, for the purpose of raising stampers, pounders, or pistons in a vertical direction and letting them fall by their own weight. Wipers are employed in fulling-mills, stamping-mills, oil-mills, powder-mills, etc. Also wipe.—4. A steel implement for cleaning the bore of a musket, etc. It has two twisted arms, screws on the end of a ramrod, and carries a piece of cloth or a bunch of tow. The larger wipers for cleaning cannon are attached to a wooden stick, and are termed worms or sponges. See cut under gun.

wiper-wheel (wip'er-hwel), n. A cam-wheel serving to lift a trip-hammer, a stamp, or the like, allowing it to fall again by its own weight. See cam.

wiping (wip'ing), n. 1. The act of one who wipes; specifically, a beating; a thrashing; a trimming. [Slang.]

Even in the domestic circle one can have a choice of "a towelling," "a basting," "a clouting," . . . "a trimming," or "a wiping," when occasion requires.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 153.

2. In plumbing: (a) The removal, with a greased cloth, of solder which has been poured upon a joint to heat it before soldering. (b) The operation of shaping with a wooden pad a mass of solder applied to form a wiped joint.

wiping-rod (wip'ing-rod), n. See wiper, 4.

wirdt, wridet, n. Obsolete variants of wire.

wire<sup>1</sup> (wir), n. and a. [< ME. wir, wyr, < AS. wir, a wire, a spiral ornament of wire, = MLG. wire, Lt. wir, wire; cf. OHG. wiara, MHG. wiere, fine-drawn gold, gold ornament, = Icel. vîrr, wire (cf. Sw. vîr, wind, twist); cf. Lith. wela, iron wire, L. vires, armlets (see virole, ferrule). I. n. 1. An extremely elongated body of elastic material; specifically, a slender bar of metal, commonly circular in section; from the size which can be bent by the hand with some difficulty down to a fine thread. Wire was originally made by hammering, a sort of groove in the anvil serving to determine the size. It is now drawn by powerful machinery, and passed through a series of holes constantly diminishing in size. Wire of square section, flat like a tape, etc., is also made.

Fetisch hir fyngres were fretted with golde wyre.

Piers Plowman (B), ii. 11.

Wyre. Filum, vel ferrifilum . . . (filum ereum vel ferreum, P.).

Prompt. Parv., p. 530.

At what period and among what people the art of working up pure gold, or gilded silver, into a long, round hair-like thread—into what may be correctly called wire—begin, is quite unknown.

S. K. Handbook Textile Fabrics, p. 22.

2t. A twisted thread; a filament.

Alib. Peace, peace, or the wire comes!

Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, i. 2.

6. In ornith., one of the extremely long, slender, wire-like filaments or shafts of the plumage of various birds. See wired, wire-tailed, and cut under Fidestrela.—7. pl. Figuratively, that by which any organization or body of persons is controlled and directed: now used chiefly in political slang. See wire-pulling.

Now, however, there was a vacancy, and they [the politicians] scented their prey afar off. The usual manipulation of the wires began, and they were managed with the usual skill.

The Nation, XVI. 330.

8. A pickpocket with long fingers, expert at picking women's pockets. Hotten. [Thieves' slang.]

He was worth 20*l.* a week, he said, as a wire—that is, a picker of ladies' pockets.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 410.

9. A fiber of cobweb, a fine platinum wire, or a line upon glass, fixed in the focus of a telescope, to aid in comparing the positions of objects.—Barbed, beaded, dead wire. See the adjectives.—Binding-wire. See binding.—Compound telegraph-wire, a wire composed of a steel center surrounded by a copper tube, the object being to obtain the necessary conductivity and strength with less material than is required when iron wire is used.—Dovetail wire, a wire having a wedge-shaped section.—Earth wire. See earth-wire.—Filling the wire, in teleg., putting such a number of stations on one wire that it is occupied during the whole day.—Gold wire, a wire formed of a core of silver covered with gold. It may be drawn out to the fineness of thread.—Ground-wire. Same as earth-wire.—Hollow wire, in goldsmithing, small tubes used for making joints, as in the cases of watches, etc.—Latten live, phantom wire. See the qualifying words.—Leading-in wire, the wire which makes connection between a telegraph-line and a telegraph-office.—Open wires, in teleg., exposed or overhead bare wires. Also sometimes used for open circuit.—Saddle wire, a telegraph-wire carried on insulators fixed directly to the tops of the poles.—Taped wires, wires covered with tape for insulation or weather-protection.—Telodynamic wire, a wire used to transmit force or power, as in giving motion to a machine from a countershaft or from the driving-pulley of an engine.—To pull or work (the) wires. See wire-pulling.—Under-takers' wire, a kind of insulated wire the use of which was at one time authorized by the fire-insurance underwriters for electric-lighting purposes. The name was given because of the defective quality or insulation of this wire and the consequent danger in its use. [Colloq.]—Wire-covering machine, a machine for covering wire with a finer wire or with thread.—Wire of Lapland, a shining slender material made from the sinews of the reindeer, soaked in water, beaten, and spun into a sort of thread of great strength. These threads are dipped in melted tin, and drawn through a horn with a hole in it. The Laplanders use this wire for embroidering their clothes.—Wire-twisting machine, a machine or tool for joining ends of wire, as sections of fencing- or telegraph-wires etc., by twisting them on each other.—Woven-wire lathing. See lathing.

II. a. Made of wire; consisting of or fitted with wires: as, a wire sieve; a wire bird-cage.

He did him to the wire-window,

As fast as he could gang.

Wirsung's canal or duct. The pancreatic duct.
wiry (wir'i), a. [From wire + -y.] 1. Made of wire; in the form of wire.

Come down, come down, my bonny bird, . . .

Your cage shall be of wiry gold,

Whar now it's but the wand.

Lord William (Child's Ballads, III. 20).

For caught, and cag'd, and starv'd to death,

In dying sighs my little breath

Soon pass'd the wiry grate.

Cowper, On a Goldfinch Starved to Death in His Cage.

2. Resembling wire; especially, tough and flexible; of persons, lean and sinewy.

Here on its wiry stem, in rigid bloom,

Grows the salt lavender that lacks perfume.

Crabbe, Works, IV. 216.

A little wiry sergeant of meek demeanour and strong sense.

Dickens, Detective Police.

She was wiry, and strong, and nimble.

Trollope, Last Chronicle of Barset, xxxvii.

She had a light, trim, wiry figure, especially adapted to those feats of skill which depend on balance.

Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. viii.

Wiry pulse. See pulse.

wis<sup>1</sup>, a. [ME. wis, certain, sure, for certain, to wisse, certainly, mid wisse, with certainty; = Icel. viss, certain, = Sw. viss, certain (viss, certainly), = Dan. vis, certain (vist, certainly); in AS. D. and G. the word appears with a prefix, AS. gewis = D. gewis = G. gewiss, certain, certainly: see wis<sup>2</sup>, wis<sup>3</sup>, wis.] Certain; sure; especially in the phrases to wisse, for certain, certainly; mid wisse, with certainty.

That witte thu to wisse.

Legend of St. Catherine (ed. Morton), l. 1543.

wis<sup>2</sup>, adv. [Early mod. E. (dial.) wusse; < ME. wis, by apheresis from wis: see wis.] Certainly; truly; indeed: same as wis.

"No, wis," quod he, "myn owen nece dere."

Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 474.

Kennell, Why, I hope you will not a-hawking now, will you?

Stephen, No, wusse; but I'll practise against next year, uncle. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, l. 1.

wis<sup>3</sup>, v. A spurious word, arising from a misunderstanding of the Middle English adverb wis, often written i-wis, and in Middle English manuscripts i wis, I wis, whence it has been taken as the pronoun I with a verb wis, vaguely regarded as connected with wit (which has a preterit wist). See wis, and, for the real verb, see wit.

Which book, advisedly read, and diligently followed but one year at home in England, would do a young gentleman more good, I wiss, than three years' travell abroad.

Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 65.

Where my morning haunts are he wisses not.

Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

wisard, n. and a. An obsolete spelling of wizard.

wisdom (wiz'dum), n. [ME. wisdom, wysdom, wisedom, < AS. wisdom, wisdom (= OS. wisdom = OFries. wisdom = MD. wijsdom = OHG. MHG. wistuom, wisdom, knowledge, judgment, G. weissthum, knowledge, = Icel. wisdóm = Sw. Dan. wisdóm, wisdom), < wis, wise, + dóm, condition: see wis<sup>1</sup> and -dóm.] 1. The property of being wise; the power or faculty of forming the fittest and truest judgment in any matter presented for consideration; a combination of discernment, discretion, and sagacity, or similar qualities and faculties, involving also a certain amount of knowledge, especially the knowledge of men and things gained by experience. It is often used in a sense nearly synonymous with discretion, or with prudence, but both of these are strictly only particular phases of wisdom. Frequently wisdom implies little more than sound and sober common-sense: hence it is often opposed to jolly.

Than seide thei, be comen assent, thei wolde counseile with Merlyn, that hadde grete wisdom.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 95.

The beste wysdom that I Can ys to doe well & drede no man.

Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S.), extra ser., i. 68.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power.

Hooker.

If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;

And 'tis not wisdom thus to second grief

Against yourself. Shak., Much Ado, v. 1. 2.

When I arraigned the wisdom of Providence, I only showed my own ignorance.

Goldsmith, Asen.

If old age is even a state of suffering, it is a state of superior wisdom, in which man avoids all the rash and foolish things he does in his youth.

Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, vi.

2. Human learning; knowledge of arts and sciences; erudition.

Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians.

Acts vii. 22.

The Doctors laden with so many badges or cognisances of wisdom.

Foote (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 105).

3. With possessive pronouns used as a personification (like "your highness," etc.).

Viola. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.

Clown. . . . I think I saw your wisdom there.

Shak., T. N., iii. 1. 47.

Do, my good fools, my honest pious coxcombs,

My wary tools too! have I caught your wisdoms?

Fletcher, Wife for a Month, iv. 1.

4. A wise saying or or; a wise thing.

They which do eate or drinke, hauntyng those wisdomes ever in sight, . . . may sussitate some disputation or reasonyng wherby some part of tyme shall be sau'd whiche els . . . wolde be idely consumed.

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 3.

One of her many wisdoms. Mrs. H. Jackson, Ramona, i.

5. Skill; skillfulness.

And I have filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship.

Ex. xxxi. 3.

[In Scripture the word is sometimes specifically used, especially in Paul's Epistles, in an opprobrious sense to designate the theosophical speculations (1 Cor. i. 19, 20) or rhetorical arts (1 Cor. ii. 5) current among the Greeks and Romans in the first century; sometimes in a good sense to designate spiritual perception of, accompanied with obedience to, the divine law (Prov. iii. 13; Acts vi. 3). Sometimes (as in Prov. viii.) it has personal attributes assigned to it.]

Book of Wisdom of Jesus. See Ecclesiasticus.—Book of Wisdom of Solomon, one of the deuterocanonical books of the Old Testament. (See deuterocanonical and Apocrypha.) Tradition ascribes its authorship to Solomon; but by most modern Protestant theologians it is attributed to an Alexandrian Jew of the first or second century B. C. The shorter title Wisdom, or Book of Wisdom, is commonly applied to this book, but not to Ecclesiasticus. Abbreviated Wisd.—Salt of wisdom. Same as sal alernbroth (which see, under sal).—Syn. I. Knowledge, Prudence, Wisdom, Discretion, Providence, Forecast, Provision. Knowledge has several steps, as the perception of facts, the accumulation of facts, and familiarity by experience, but it does not include action, nor the power of judging what is best in ends to be pursued or in means for attaining those ends. Prudence is sometimes the power of judging what are the best means for attaining desired ends; it may be a word or action, or it may be simply the power to avoid danger. It implies deliberation and care, whether in acting or refraining from action. Wisdom chooses not only the best means but also the best ends; it is thus far higher than prudence, which may by choosing wrong ends go altogether astray; hence also it is often used in the Bible for piety. As compared with knowledge, it sees more deeply into the heart of things and more broadly and comprehensively sums up relations, draws conclusions, and acts upon them; hence a man may abound in knowledge and be very deficient in wisdom, or he may have a practical wisdom with a comparatively small stock of knowledge. Discretion is the power to judge critically what is correct and proper, sometimes without suggesting action, but more often in view of action proposed or possible. Like prudence the word implies great caution, and takes for granted that a man will not act contrary to what he knows. Providence looks much further ahead than prudence or discretion, and plans and acts according to what it sees. It may be remarked that provision, which is from the same root as providence and prudence, is primarily a word of action, while they are only secondarily so. Forecast is a grave word for looking carefully forward to the consequences of present situations and decisions; it implies, like all these words except knowledge, that one will act according to what he can make out of the future. See cautious, astute, and genius.

I wisdom dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

Prov. vii. 12.

Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one, Have ofttimes no connexion. Knowledge dwells In heads replete with thoughts of other men; Wisdom in minds attentive to their own. Knowledge, a rude, unprofitable mass, The mere materials with which Wisdom builds, Till smooth'd, and squar'd, and fitted to its place, Does but encumber whom it seems to enrich. Knowledge is proud that he has learn'd so much; Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.

Cowper, Task, vi. 58.

Men of gud dyscretiounene
Suld cunne and loue Huchowne,
That cunnand wes in literature.

Wynton, quoted in Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), [Pref., p. xxv.]

This was your providence,
Your wisdom, to elect this gentleman,
Your excellent forecast in the man, your knowledge!

Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

wisdom-tooth (wiz'dóm-tóth), n. The last molar tooth on either side of each jaw. It appears ordinarily between the ages of 20 and 25, presumably years of discretion (whence the name). Also technically called dens sapientie. Also wit-tooth.

It seems to me in these days they're all born with their wisdom-teeth cut and their whiskers grown.

Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. xxvi.

wis<sup>1</sup> (wiz), a. [ME. wis, wys, < AS. wis = OS. OFries. wis = D. wijs = MLG. wis, LG. wis = OHG. wis, wisi, MHG. wis, wise, G. weise = Icel. viss = Sw. Dan. vis = Goth. weis (in comp. unweis, unwise), wise; prob. orig. **witsa*, **witta*, with pp. formative, from the root of AS. witan, etc., E. wit, know: see wit.] 1. Having the power of discerning and judging rightly, or of discriminating between what is true and what is false, between that which is right, fit, and proper and that which is unsuitable, injudicious, and wrong; possessed of discernment, discretion, and judgment: as, a wise prince; a wise magistrate.

Five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

Mat. xxv. 2.

Smollett, (Imp. Dict.)

The wishy-washy, bread-and-butter period of life.
Trollope, Barchester Towers, xli.

II. n. Any sort of thin, weak liquor. [Colloq.]

wisket (wis'ket), n. Same as wisket.

wisliche, wislokert, adv. Middle English forms of wisely, wiselier (more wisely).

wisly, adv. [ME., also wysly, wislike; < AS. gewislice, gewisslice, < gewis, certain: see wis<sup>2</sup>, wis.] Certainly; surely.

I not myself noght wisly what it is.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1653.

wisp (wisp), n. [< ME. wisp, wisp, wesp, wizepe, also wips, an older form (the s being prob. formative); not found in AS.; cf. LG. wiep, a wisp;
cf. Norw. vippa, something that skips about, a wisp to sprinkle or daub with, a swape, or machine for raising water, etc., = Sw. dial. vipp, an ear of rye, a little sheaf or bundle; cf. Goth.
waips, also wipja, a crown. Wisp has nothing to do with whisk<sup>1</sup>: see whisk<sup>1</sup>.] 1. A handful or small bundle, as of straw or hay; a twisted

Wistaria (wis-tā'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Nuttall, 1818), named in honor of Caspar Wistar, an American anatomist (1761–1818).] 1. A genus of leguminous plants, of the tribe Galegeæ and subtribe Tephrosieæ. It is characterized by having papilion-aceous flowers in terminal racemes, with a smooth style and stamens usually completely diadelphous, and by a cori-aceous readily dehiscent legume, the last character separating it from the large tropical Old World genus Millettia.
There are 2 or 3 species, natives of North America, China, and Japan. They are lofty climbing shrubs with odd-pi-nate leaves, entire feather-veined and reticulated leaflets, and small stipules. The handsome purplish flowers form terminal pendent racemes. They are much cultivated in America, commonly under the generic name (sometimes erroneously Wistaria); in England they are often known as kidney-bean tree, in Australia as grape flower vine. W. Chinensis, the Chinese, and W. frutescens, the American wistaria, are much used in the United States to cover ve-randas and walls. The latter is a native of swamp-margins from Virginia to Illinois and southward, and develops its flowers at the same time with the leaves, instead of before them, as in W. Chinensis. W. Japonica, by some thought not a distinct species, is commonly trained in Japan horizontally on trellises over pleasure-seats as an ornamental shade; it sometimes lives more than a century.

2. [i. e.] A plant of this genus.

wistful (wis'tŭl), a. [Prob. for **whistful*, based on the older adverb wistly, which is prob. for whistly. The assumption that wistful stands for wistful is untenable; for the required change wistful > **wistful* > wistful could not occur in the mod. E. period, particularly with wistful itself remaining in use; but the sense 'longing' appears to have arisen in part from association with wishful. It is to be noted that wistful in the earliest instance quoted (Browne) does not mean, as some dictionaries give it, merely 'observant' or 'attentive,' and that its later uses are more or less indefinite, indicating that it was orig. a poetical word, based on some other, which other is prob. wistly for whistly as here assumed.] 1. Silent; hushed; standing in mute attention.

In sullen mutt'rings chid
The artless songsters, that their musicke still Should charme the sweet dale and the wistful hill.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 2.

This commanding creature . . . put on such a resignation in her countenance, and bore the whispers of all around the court with such a pretty uneasiness, . . . until she was perfectly confused by meeting something so wistful in all she encountered. Steele, Spectator, No. 113.

2. Full of thoughts; contemplative; musing;
pensive.

Why, Grubbinol, dost thou so wistful seem?
There's sorrow in thy look.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Friday.

3. Wishful; longing.

Lifting up one of my sashes, [I] cast many a wistful, melancholy look towards the sea.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 8.

No poet has expressed more vividly than Shelley the wistful eagerness of the human spirit to interpret the riddle of the universe. E. Dowden, Shelley, l. 75.

wistfully (wis'tŭl-i), adv. In a wistful manner; pensively; earnestly; longingly; wishfully.

With that, he fell again to pry
Through perspective more wistfully.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. iii. 458.

The captive's miserable solace of gazing wistfully upon the world from which he is excluded.
Irvine, Sketch-Book, p. 112.

Doubtless there is nothing sinful in gazing wistfully at the marvellous providences of God's moral governance, and wishing to understand them.
J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 204.

wistfulness (wis'tŭl-nes), n. The state or property of being wistful.

wistless (wis'tles), a. [Irreg. < wist, known: see wit<sup>1</sup>. Cf. wistful and -less.] Not knowing; ignorant (of); unwitting (of). [Rare.]

Wistless what I did, half from the sheath Drew its glittering blade. Southey, Joan of Arc, i.

wistly (wis'tli), adv. [Prob. for whistly, i. e.
'silently,' which sense suits the earliest quotations (cf. "And her eyes on all my motions with a mute observance hung," Tennyson, Locksley Hall); the change of hw to w is very common in England, and may well have been assisted in this instance by association with wist, pret. of wit, and with wish; but to derive wistly from either wist or wish (as if for wishedly) is contrary to sound theory and to the actual use of the word. Wistly in the "Mir. for Mags.," given as the "same as wistly," may be truly wishly, < wish + -ly<sup>2</sup>. The same considerations apply to wistful, which appears to stand for **whistful*.]

1. Silently; with mute attention; earnestly.

Robyn behelde our comly kyng Wistly in the face.

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 215.

Thou art the mightiest voice in England, man;

Thy voice will lead the Witan.

Tennyson, Harold, ii. 2.

witch<sup>1</sup> (wich), n. [ME. witche, wiche, wicheche, wiche, a witch (man or woman). < AS. wicea, m., wice, f. (pl. wicean in both genders), a sorcerer or sorceress, a wizard or witch; = Fries. wikke = LG. wikke, a witch; cf. Icel. vitki, m., a witch, wizard, prob. after AS.; prob. a reduction, with shortened vowel and assimilation of consonants (ty > tk > kk in AS. written ce), of AS. witga, a syncope of witiga, witga, a seer, prophet, soothsayer, magician (cf. deafid-witga, 'devil prophet,' wizard) (= OHG. wizago, wizago, a prophet, soothsayer), < **witig*, seeing, a form parallel to witig (with short vowel), knowing, witan, know, **witan*, see: see wit<sup>1</sup>, and cf. witly. The notion that witch is a fem. form is usually accompanied by the notion that the corresponding masc. is wizard (the two words forming one of the pairs of masc. and fem. correlatives given in the grammars); but witch is historically masc. as well as fem. (being indeed orig., in the AS. form witga, only masc.), and wizard has no immediate relation to witch. Cf. wisacere, ult. < OHG. wizago, and so a doublet of witch. Hence ult. (< AS. wicea) ME. wikke, wicke, evil, wicked, and wikked, wicked, wicked: see wick<sup>1</sup> and wicked<sup>1</sup>. The change of form (AS. wicea < witga) is paralleled by a similar change in orchard (AS. orcard < ortgeard < ortgeard), and the development of sense ('wicked,' 'wicked') is in keeping with the history of other words which have become ultimately associated with popular superstitions—superstition, whether religious or etymological, tending to pervert or distort the forms and meanings of words.] 1. A person (of either sex) given to the black art: a sorcerer; a conjurer; a wizard; later and more particularly, a woman supposed to have formed a compact with the devil or with evil spirits, and to be able by their aid to operate supernaturally; one who practises sorcery or enchantment; a sorceress.

"Crucifige," quod a cacchepolle. "I warante hym a witch!"
Piers Plowman (B), xviii. 46.

There was a man in that citee, whose name was Symount, a wicche.
Wyclif, Acts viii. 9.

Devil or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:

Blood will I draw on thee: thou art a witch.

Witches' Sabbath. See Sabbath, 5.—Witch of Agnesi, in math. a plane curve discussed by Donna Maria Gaetana Agnesi, professor of mathematics in the University of Bologna, who died a nun in 1799. It consists of a straight line together with a cubic to which that line is the inflectional asymptote, this cubic having an ascnode at infinity in a direction perpendicular to the line. If  $x = 0$  is the equation of the line,  $(y/x)^2 + 1 = (x/x)^2$  is that of the cubic. The area of the curve is four times that of the circle having four-point contact with the cubic and two-point contact with the line. Also called versiera.

witch<sup>1</sup> (wich), v. t. [ME. witchen, wicchen, wichen, < AS. wiccian, bewitch; cf. D. LG. wikken = Icel. vitka, soothsay, divine; from the noun. Cf. bewitch.] 1. To bewitch; fascinate; enchant.

Ne schuld he with wicchecraft be wicched neuer more.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1427.

For she has given me poison in a kiss—

She had it 'twix her lips—and with her eyes

She witches people.

witch-chick (wich'chik), n. A swallow: from an old superstition. See swallow-struck. Also witchuck and witch-hag.

witchcraft (wich'kráft), n. [ME. wicchecraft, < AS. wiccecraft, wiccraft, witchcraft, < wicca, m., wicce, f., witch, + craft, craft: see witch<sup>1</sup> and craft<sup>1</sup>.] 1. The practices of witches; sorcery; a supernatural power which persons were formerly supposed to obtain by entering into compact with the devil. The belief in witchcraft was common in Europe till the sixteenth century, and maintained its ground with tolerable firmness till the middle of the seventeenth century; indeed it is not altogether extinct even at the present day. Numbers of reputed witches were formerly condemned to be burned. One conspicuous outbreak of popular excitement over supposed demoniacal manifestations took place about 1692 in New England, especially in and near Salem.

There was thane an Enchantour in the Contree, that deled with Wycche craft, that men clepten Taknia.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 132.

Now the arrival of Sir William Phips to the government of New-England was at a time when . . . scores of poor people had newly fallen under a prodigious possession of devils, which it was then generally thought had been by witchcrafts introduced. C. Mather, Mag. Christ., ii. 13.

2. Extraordinary power; irresistible influence; fascination; witchery.

You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate.

Shak., Hen. V., v. 2. 301.

There's witchcraft in thy language, in thy face,

In thy demeanours. Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iv. 3.

The subtle witchcraft of his tongue

Unlocked the hearts of those who keep

Gold, the world's bond of slavery.

Shelley, Rosalind and Helen.

witch-doctor (wich'dok'tor), n. Same as medicine-man. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 820.

witch-elm (wich'elm), n. [Also wich-elm, and archaically wych-elm; also weech-elm; < witch<sup>2</sup> + elm. In this word and witch-hazel, the archaic spelling is much affected in modern use.] An elm, Ulmus montana, of hilly districts in western and northern Europe and northern Asia; the common wild elm of Scotland, Ireland, and the northern and western parts of England. It is less tall than the common English elm (U. campestris), but is a considerable tree, of picturesque habit, the trunk branching naturally near the base, the leaves broadly ovate. The wood has the fine-grained, tough, and elastic quality of U. campestris, and is preferred for bent work, as in boat-building. In southeastern England a variety of the common elm is also called by this name.

The witch-elm that shades Saint Fillan's Spring.

Scott, L. of the L., i. Int.

Witch-elms that counterchange the floor

Of this flat lawn with dusk and bright.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxxix.

He never felt

The witchery of the soft blue sky.

Wordsworth, Peter Bell.

witches'-besom (wich'ez-bé'sum), n. Same as witches'-broom.

witches'-broom (wich'ez-bróm), n. A popular name for the broom-like tufts of branches developed on the silver-fir, birch, cherry, and other trees in consequence of the attack of a uredineous fungus, Peridermium elatinum.

witches'-butter (wich'ez-but'er), n. An alga. See Nostoc, 2.

witches'-thimble (wich'ez-thim'bl), n. See thimble and Silene.

witchet (wich'et), n. [Origin obscure.] A rounding-plane.

witch-finder (wich'fin'dér), n. A professional discoverer of witches, whose services were sometimes employed when the persecution of so-called witches was in vogue.

He [Matthew Hopkins] then set up as "Witch Finder General," and, on the invitation of several towns, made journeys for the discovery of witches through Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, and Huntingdonshire. . . . Supposed witches were urged to confess, and on the strength of their own confession were hanged.

Dict. Nat. Biog., XXVII. 336.

witch-grass (wich'grás), n. 1. Same as old-witch grass.—2. The quitch-grass or couch-grass, Agropyrum repens.

witch-hag (wich'hag), n. Same as witch-chick.

witch-hazel (wich'házl), n. [Also wich-hazel, wych-hazel; < witch<sup>2</sup> + hazel. Cf. witch-elm.] 1. The witch- or wych-elm, Ulmus montana, its broad leaves resembling those of hazel. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A shrub or small tree, Hamamelis Virginiana, of eastern North America. It is noticeable for its flowers with four yellow strap-shaped petals, appearing when the leaves are falling, the fruit, which is a woody capsule, ripening the next season. The leaves a, male flower; b, fruit.

Branch with Fruits of Witch-hazel (Hamamelis Virginiana).

are broad and straight-veined, wavy-margined. The leaves and bark of witch-hazel abound in tannin, and the bark affords also a reputed sedative application for various cases of external inflammation. The leaves are said to possess similar properties, and an infusion of them is given internally for bowel-complaints and hemorrhages. While witch-hazel is now much in vogue as a cure for bruises and sprains, as also for various internal difficulties, and is even officially recognized, its real virtue, if any, is still quite in doubt.

witching (wich'ing), p. a. 1. Bewitching; suited to enchantment or witchcraft; weird.

A digitigrade carnivorous canine quadruped, Canis lupus, of the lupine or thoid series of Canidae; hence, some similar animal. The common wolf of Europe, etc., is yellowish or fulvous-gray, with harsh strong hair, erect pointed ears, and the tail straight or nearly so. The height at the shoulder is from 27 to 29 inches. Wolves are swift of foot, crafty, and rapacious, and destructive enemies to the sheep-cote and farm-yard; they associate in packs to hunt the larger quadrupeds, as the deer, the elk, etc. When hard pressed with hunger these packs not infrequently attack isolated travelers, and have been known even to enter villages and carry off children. In general, however, wolves are cowardly and stealthy, approaching sheepfolds and farm-buildings only at dead of night, making a rapid retreat if in the least disturbed by a dog or a man, and exhibiting great cunning in the avoidance of traps. Wolves are still numerous in some parts of Europe, as France, Hungary, Spain, Turkey, and Russia; they probably ceased to exist in England about the end of the fifteenth century, and in Scotland in the first part of the eighteenth century; the latter date probably marks also the disappearance of wolves in Ireland. The wolves of North America are of two very distinct species. One of these is scarcely different from the European, but is generally regarded as a variety, under the name of C. l. occidentalis. The usual color is a grizzled gray, but it sports in many colors, as reddish and blackish. Most strains of the American wolf are larger and stouter than those of Europe. The gray wolf is also called the buffalo-wolf, from its former abundance in the buffalo-range, and timber-wolf, as distinguished from the prairie-wolf or coyote, Canis latrans, a much smaller and very different animal, which lives chiefly in open country, in burrows in the ground, and in some respects resembles the jackal. (See coyote, with cut.) Yet other wolves, of rather numerous species, inhabit most parts of the world; some grade into jackals (see Thous), others toward foxes (see fox-wolf); and most of them interbreed easily with some varieties of the dog of the countries they respectively inhabit, the dog itself being a composite of a mixed wolf ancestry (see wolf-dog, 2).

2. A person noted for ravenousness, cruelty, cunning, or the like: used in opprobrium.

Rescued is Orleans from the English wolves.

5. In music: (a) The harsh discord heard in certain chords of keyboard-instruments, especially the organ, when tuned on some system of unequal temperament. In the mean-tone system, as usually applied, five intervals in each octave were discordant—namely, G♯-E♯, B-E♯, F♯-B, C♯-F, and G♯-C. Under the modern system of equal temperament, the wolf is evenly distributed, and so practically unnoticed. (b) A chord or interval in which such a discord appears. (c) In instruments of the viol class, a discordant or false vibration in a string when stopped at a certain point, usually due to a defect in the structure or adjustment of the instrument. Sometimes called wolf-note.—6. A wooden fence placed across a ditch in the corner of a field, to prevent cattle from straying into another field by means of the ditch. Halliwell. [Local, Eng.]—7. Same as willow?

wonder-wounded (wun'dér-wôn'ded), a. Struck with wonder or surprise; wonder-stricken.

What is he whose grief . . .
 Conjures the wandering stars, and makes them stand Like wonder-wounded hearers? Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 280.

wondrous (wun'drus), a. [Formerly wonderous, wondrous, < wonder + -ous; prob. suggested by marvelous, etc., but in part a substitute for early mod. E. wonders: see wonders.] 1. a. Of a kind or degree to excite wonder; wonderful; marvelous; strange.

That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Ps. xxvi. 7.

Wherefore gaze this goodly company,
 As if they saw some wondrous monument?
Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 97.

And yet no Angel envy'd Him his place
 Who ever look'd upon his wondrous face.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 214.

Wondrous truths, and manifold as wondrous,
 God hath written in those stars above.
Longfellow, Flowers.

wondrous (wun'drus), adv. [< wondrous, a.] In a wonderful or surprising degree; remarkably; exceedingly.

I found you wondrous kind. Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 311.
 I shall grow wondrous melancholy if I stay long here without company.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, v. 1.

wondrously (wun'drus-li), adv. [< wondrous + -ly.] In a strange or wonderful manner or degree.

My lord leans wondrously to discontent.
Shak., T. of A., iii. 4. 71.
 Cloe complains, and wondrously's aggrieved.
Glanville, Cloe.

wondrousness (wun'drus-nes), n. The quality of being wondrous.

Wontedness of opinion. Eikon Basilike, p. 163.

What wontlesse fury dost thou now inspire
 Into my feeble breast, too full of thee?
Spenser, In Honour of Beautie, l. 2.

He, remembering the past day
 When from his name the affrighted sons of France
 Fled trembling, all astonished at their force
 And wontless valour, rages round the field Dreadful in anger. Southey.

wool† (wō), v. [Early mod. E. also wo, wowe, wowe; < ME. wowen, wogen, < AS. wogian, in comp. wōgān, wōo; prob. lit. 'bend, incline,' hence incline another toward oneself, < wōh (wōg), bent, curved, crooked; cf. Goth. wahs, bent, in comp. un-wahs, not crooked, blameless; cf. Skt. vañch, go tortuously, be crooked; cf. L. vacillare, vacillate, varus, crooked: see vacillate, varicose, etc.] I. trans. 1. To court; seek the favor, affection, or love of, especially with a view to marriage; solicit or seek in marriage.

He woveth hire by meenes and brocage.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 189.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
 She is a woman, therefore to be won.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 3. 78.

2. To solicit; sue; ask with importunity; seek to influence or persuade; invite; endeavor to prevail upon to do or to grant something.

Having woo'd
 A villain to attempt it. Shak., Pericles, v. 1. 174.

I wooed her for to dine,
 But could not get her.

Phyllida flouts me (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 310).

Thee, chauntress, oft, the woods among,
 I woo, to hear thy even-song.
Milton, II Penseroso, l. 64.

3. To seek; seek to obtain or bring about; act as if seeking to obtain or bring about.

Some in their actions do woo and affect honour and reputation. Bacon, Honour and Reputation (ed. 1887).

Whose gently-looking beauties only do Inamour Ruin and Destruction woo.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 6.

II. intrans. 1. To court; make love; sue in love.

wood-bird (wùd'berd), n. A bird that lives in the woods.

Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?

Shak. M. S. D. iv. 1. 145.

wood-block (wùd'blok), n. 1. In engraving, a die cut in relief on wood, and in condition for furnishing impressions in ink in a printing-press; a woodcut. See wood-engraving. The wood commonly used for wood-blocks is box, the blocks being cut directly across the grain. Inferior kinds of wood, such as American rock-maple, pear, plane, etc., are used for coarser work.

2. A print or impression from such an engraved block; a woodcut. Also used attributively in both senses: as, wood-block illustrations.

wood-boiler (wùd'boi'ler), n. A vessel adapted for boiling wood in order to soften it and thus facilitate working.

wood-borer (wùd'bör'er), n. That which bores wood, as an insect, a crustacean, or a mollusk. Compare Cis, ship-worm, Saperda, and teredo, and other citations under wood-boring.

wood-boring (wùd'bör'ing), a. Capable of or characterized by boring wood; having the habits of a wood-borer: as, the wood-boring shrimps; wood-boring beetles. See gribble<sup>2</sup>, Limnoria, Cheluridae, Lymerisyon, ship-worm, and teredo.

wood-born (wùd'börn), a. Born in the woods. [Rare.]

The woodborne people fall before her flat.

Spenser, F. Q., I. vi. 16.

wood-bound (wùd'bound), a. Encumbered with tall woody hedgerows. Imp. Dict.

wood-brick (wùd'brik), n. A block of wood, of the shape and size of a brick, inserted in the interior walls of a building to afford a hold for the joinery, etc.

Woodbridge gun. See gun<sup>1</sup>.

wood-broney (wùd'brö'ni), n. The common ash, Fraxinus excelsior. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-broom (wùd'bröm), n. The wild teazel, Dipsacus sylvestris.

wood-bug (wùd'bug), n. A forest-bug.

woodburytype (wùd'ber-i-tip), n. [Named after Sir Walter Woodbury, the inventor.] 1. A photomechanical process in which a matrix is produced from a negative on a plate of bichromated gelatin, hardened in alum, and transferred under very heavy pressure to a surface of metal. The resulting plate of metal affords very beautiful prints in the lithographic press. The printing is done in a pigment compounded with gelatin, the impression being hardened and fixed by immersion in a solution of alum. Compare heliotypy.

2. A picture produced by this process.

wood-calamint (wùd'kal'a-mint), n. See Calamintha.

wood-carpet (wùd'kär'pet), n. 1. A floor-covering made of slats or more ornamental shapes of wood of different colors, fastened to a cloth backing. The different pieces of wood are arranged so as to produce the effects of tessellated floors, mosaic-work, etc. Also called in the United States wood-carpeting.

2. A British geometrid moth, Melanippe rivata, common in the south of England.

wood-carver (wùd'kär'vér), n. One who carves wood.

The peasants are turners, lapidaries, electro-platers, wood-carvers, and spectacle-makers.

Edinburgh Rev., c. LXVI. 310.

wood-carving (wùd'kär'ving), n. 1. The art or process of carving wood.—2. A piece of sculpture in wood.

wood-cell (wùd'sel), n. A cell normally entering into the composition of the wood of plants. Wood-cells are one of the regular modifications of prosenchyma, consisting of cell-structures greatly elongated in proportion to their breadth, with very thick walls and usually pointed extremities. When thoroughly lignified, wood-cells take little active part in the metabolism of the plant, their function being mainly to give strength and power of resistance to it. Also called woody fiber. See prosenchyma, tissue, 4, and cut under disk, 4 (c).

wood-charcoal (wùd'chär'köl), n. See charcoal, 1.

woodchat (wùd'chat), n. The red-backed shrike or butcher-bird of Africa and Europe, Lanius rufus. Also called L. auriculatus and by other names. It is occasionally seen in Great Britain in summer. The name is misleading, as the bird is not a chat in any proper sense.

woodchat-shrike (wùd'chat-shrik), n. The woodchat.

wood-chopper (wùd'chop'er), n. One who chops wood; specifically, one who cuts down trees, as a lumberman.

woodchuck<sup>1</sup> (wùd'chuk), n. [Also woodshock, applied to a different quadruped; a corruption, simulating E. wood<sup>1</sup>, of wejack, weejack, repr. an Amer. Ind. name, of which the Cree form is rendered otchook by Sir John Richardson.] The commonest North American species of marmot, Arctomys monax, a large rodent quadruped of the family Sciuridae. It is from 15 to 18 inches long, of very stout, heavy form, with brownish and grayish tints above, and reddish-brown below. It feeds on vegetables of many kinds, burrows in the ground, and hibernates in winter. Also called ground hog and chuck. See cut under Arctomys. Woodchuck day, in popular myth and rural tradition, the day on which the woodchuck first comes out of its hole after its hibernation, this action being regarded as affording a weather-prophecy. The saying goes that if the woodchuck sees its shadow on that day, it retires to its burrow for six weeks longer, which implies that warm, sunshiny weather very early in the spring, or in February, arousing the woodchuck from its torpidity, is likely to be followed by a cold or late season. Also ground-hog day.

wood-chuck (wùd'chuk), n. In a lathe, a chuck adapted for holding a piece of wood to be operated on.

The stoppers are fixed in a hollow wood-chuck by slight blows of a mallet. O'Bryne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 195.

woodcoal (wùd'köl), n. Charcoal.

woodcock (wùd'kok), n. [< ME. wodekoc, wodekok, wodecoke, < AS. wuducoc, a woodcock; as wood<sup>1</sup> + cock<sup>1</sup>.] 1. One of two distinct birds of the family Scolopacidae, closely related to the true snipe (Gallinago). (a) In Europe, Scolopax rusticola (wrongly spelled rusticola), a very common bird of the northerly parts of the Old World, one of the largest and best-known representatives of its family, highly esteemed as a game-bird, its flesh being delicious, while the thick cover it inhabits and the rapidity of its flight test the nerve and skill of the sportsman. It is migratory, breeding chiefly in the higher latitudes, nesting upon the ground in a dry spot under cover, and laying four eggs. This woodcock is over 12 inches in length, and weighs from 10 to 15 ounces; the plumage is intimately variegated with brown, black, russet, and tawny. It is seldom seen in America, and only as a straggler from Europe. (b) In the United States and Canada, Philohela minor, a bird of the same general characteristics as the former, but smaller, usually under 12 inches in length, and weighing 9 ounces or less; the under parts are whole-colored, and there is a generic difference from Scolopax rusticola in the structure of the outer primaries, three of which are attenuated and abbreviated in Philohela. The sexes are alike in color, but the female is considerably larger than the male, and alone reaches the maximum size and weight above given; the male is usually 10 to 11 inches long, and 16 to 17 in spread, weighing 5, 6, or 7 ounces according to condition. The bill is perfectly straight, 2½ to 3 inches long, and deeply furrowed; it is a very sensitive probe, with which the bird feels for worms in the mud by thrusting it in for its full length. The physiognomy of the woodcock is peculiar, by reason of the shape of the head, and the great size of the dark eyes, as well as their site high up and far back. The wings are short and rounded, but ample; the tail is very short, rounded, and usually held up; the legs are feathered to the heel, naked beyond; the toes are cleft quite to the base; there is a small hind toe, and the middle toe with its claw is rather longer than the tarsus. The woodcock is to some extent a nocturnal bird. It abounds in most of its range, and is one of the leading game-birds of America; it is found in bogs and swamps, wet woodlands, alder-brakes (sometimes called woodcock-brakes in consequence), and not seldom in quite dry fields, as corn-fields; it is migratory, but erratic and capricious in its movements, and nests throughout its range. The eggs are laid on the ground, generally in April (earlier or later according to latitude); they are less pointed than usual among waders, 1½ by 1 inch in size, of a brownish-gray color, with very numerous and small chocolate-brown surface-spots and neutral-tint shell-spots; the full number is four. The woodcock has a peculiar bleating cry, and sometimes exhibits the curious habit of removing the young from danger by flying off with the chick, which is held in the parent's feet. Also called snipe, with or without qualifying words (see snipe<sup>1</sup>, 1 (c)), American woodcock, little woodcock, lesser woodcock, red woodcock, wood-hen, bog-sucker, bogbird, timberdoodle, hookumpake, night-peck, night-partridge, shrupps, cock (short for woodcock), and Labrador twister.

European Woodcock (Scolopax rusticola).

American Woodcock (Philohela minor).

2. The large black pileated woodpecker, or log-cock, Hyloicemus (or Ceophlaeus) pileatus. See cut under pileated. [Local, U. S.]

Woodcock . . . is applied by backwoodsmen and other country folk to the pileated woodpecker, . . . wherever that big red-crested bird of the tall timber is found.

G. Trumbull, Bird Names (1888), p. 151.

3. In conch., a woodcock-shell: more fully called thorny woodcock. Also called Venus's-comb.—4. A simoleon: in allusion to the facility with which the European woodcock allows itself to be taken in springs or in nets set for it in the glades.

Go, like a woodcock,

And thrust your neck i' the noose.

Beau. and Fl., Loyal Subject, iv. 5.

Among us in England this bird is infamous for its simplicity or folly, so that a woodcock is proverbially used for a foolish, simple person. Willoughby.

Little woodcock. (a) The great or double snipe, or woodcock-snipe, Gallinago major. [British.] (b) The American woodcock, Philohela minor: a hook-name. [U. S.]

Springs to catch woodcocks, arts to entrap simplicity. Shak., Hamlet, I. 3. 115.—Woodcock's cross, penitence for folly.

Not controversies now are in disputes

At Westminster, where such a coyle they keepe:

Where man doth man within the law betosse,

Till some go croslesse home by Woodcocks crosse.

John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

Woodcock's head. (a) A tobacco-pipe: so called from the shape.

Sav. O peace, I pray you, I love not the breath of a woodcock's head.

Fastid. Meaning my head, lady?

Sir. Not altogether so, sir; but as it were fatal to their follies that think to grace themselves with taking tobacco, when they want better entertainment, you see your pipe bears the true form of a woodcock's head.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 3.

(b) A woodcock-shell, as Murex haustellum.

woodcock-eye (wùd'kok-i), n. A snap-hook. E. H. Knight. [Eng.]

woodcock-fish (wùd'kok-fish), n. The sea-woodcock or trumpet-fish, Centriscus (or Macrorhamphosus) scolopax: so called from the long beak, like that of the snipe or woodcock. See cut under snipe-fish.

woodcock-owl (wùd'kok-oul), n. The short-eared owl, Asio accipitrinus, Otus brachyotus, or Brachyotus palustris: so called from its association with the European woodcock. [Local, Eng. and Ireland.]

woodcock-pilot (wùd'kok-pi'lot), n. The European gold-crested kinglet, Regulus cristatus: so called as preceding the woodcock in migration. See cut under goldcrest. [Local, Eng.]

woodcock-shell (wùd'kok-shel), n. One of several muricene shells which have a long spout or beak, as Murex tribulus or M. tenuispina; a woodcock, woodcock's head, or Venus's-comb. See cut under Murex.

woodcock-snipe (wùd'kok-snip), n. Same as little woodcock (a) (which see, under woodcock).

wood-copper (wùd'kop'er), n. See olivine.

wood-corn (wùd'körn), n. A certain quantity of grain paid by the tenants of some manors in Great Britain to the lord of the manor for the liberty to pick up dead or broken wood.

woodcracker (wùd'krak'er), n. The common European nutcracker or nuthatch, Sitta cæsia or S. europæa. See cut under Sitta. Plot, Nat. Hist. Oxford, p. 175. (Yarrell.) [Local, Eng.]

woodcraft (wùd'kräft), n. [< ME. wodecraft; < wood<sup>1</sup> + craft<sup>1</sup>.] Skill in anything which pertains to the woods or forest; skill in the chase, especially in hunting deer, etc.

What were woodcraft without fatigue and without danger?

Scott, Quentin Durward, x.

wood-crash (wùd'krash), n. A machine, made on the principle of a spring-rattle, used in theaters to imitate the sound of breaking timbers.

wood-cricket (wùd'krik'et), n. A kind of cricket that lives in the woods; specifically, Nemobius sylvestris, of Europe.

wood-culver (wùd'kul'ver), n. The wood-pigeon or ring-dove, Columba palumbus. Also wood-quest. [Prov. Eng.]

woodcut (wùd'kut), n. An engraving on wood, or a print from such an engraving. See wood-engraving.—Woodcut-paper, a soft paper of very fine

Every friend and fellow-woodlander.
Keats, Endymion, ii.

woodlark (wùd'lark), n. A European lark, Alauda arborea, of more decidedly arboreal habits than the skylark, to which it is closely related. It differs from the latter chiefly in being somewhat smaller, with shorter tail and more marked variegation of the colors, but its song is quite different. The nest is placed on the ground, and the eggs are four or five in number, of a white color spotted with reddish-brown. The woodlark is migratory, and widely distributed at different seasons. It is common in some parts of Great Britain, but rare in Scotland. See cut under Alauda.

wood-layer (wùd'lá'ér), n. A young oak or other timber-plant laid down among the thorn or other plants used in hedges.

wood-leopard (wùd'lep'ard), n. A beautiful white black-spotted moth, Zenzera pyrina, the larva of which lives in wood; the wood leopard-moth. This insect has been discovered in the United States since the definition of leopard-moth was published in this dictionary.

woodless (wùd'les), a. [< woodl + -less, 1.] Without timber; untimbered.

wood-lily (wùd'il'i), n. 1. The lily of the valley, Convallaria majalis; locally (from a resemblance in the racemes), the wintergreen, Pyrola minor. [Eng.]—2. A plant of the genus Trillium.

wood-liverwort (wùd'liv'ér-wèrt), n. A lichen, Sticta pulmonacea, which frequently grows on trees. See cut under apothecium.

wood-lock (wùd'lok), n. In ship-building, a piece of hard wood, close fitted and sheathed with copper, in the throating or score of the pintle, to keep the rudder from rising. Thearle, Naval Arch., ¶ 233.

wood-louse (wùd'lous), n. 1. Any terrestrial isopod of the family Oniscidae. The common wood-louse of England is a species of Oniscus. Also called hog-louse, sow-bug, slater, etc. See cuts under Isopoda and Oniscus.—2. A termite, or white ant, as Termes flavipes; any member of the Termitidae. See cut under Termes. [Local, U. S.]—3. Any one of the small whitish species of the pseudoneuropterous family Psocidae, found in the woodwork of houses; the death-watch; a book-louse. See book-louse, Psocidae, and cut under death-watch.—4. Same as wood-louse-milleped.

woodlouse-milleped (wùd'lous-mil'e-ped), n. A milleped of the family Glomeridae.

woody<sup>1</sup> (wùd'i), adv. [< ME. woody, wolly, woldliche; < woodl + -ly, 2.] Madly; furiously; wildly.

When he wightl a-wok woodl he ferde,
Al to-tare his a-tr that he to-tere mig.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), I, 3384.

Therwith the fyr of jelousye upsterte
Withinne his brest, and hente him by the herte
So woodyly that he lyk was to biholde
The box-tre or the ashen dede and colde.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, I, 443.

woodman (wùd'man), n.; pl. woodmen (-men). [Early mod. E. wodman; < woodl + man, 1.] 1. An officer appointed to take care of the king's woods; a forester. Cowell.—2. A woodsman; a hunter.

Am I a woodman, ha? Speak I like Herne the hunter?
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 30.

'Tis dangerous keeping the Fool too long at Bay, lest some old Wood-man drop in
By chance, and discover thou art but a Rascal Deer.
Etherege, Love in a Tub, v. 4.

3. One who fells timber.

Forth goes the woodman, leaving unconcerned
The cheerful haunts of man, to wield the axe
And drive the wedge in yonder forest drear.
Cowper, The Task, v. 41.

War-woodman of old Woden, how he fells
The mortal copse of faces! Tennyson, Harold, v. 1.

woodmonger<sup>1</sup> (wùd'mung'gér), n. A wood-seller; a lumber- or timber-merchant.

The House is just now upon taking away the charter from the Company of Wood-mongers, whose frauds, it seems, have been mightily laid before them.
Pepys, Diary, III, 293.

wood-mouse (wùd'mous), n. A mouse that habitually lives in the woods. Specifically—(a) In Europe, the long-tailed field-mouse, Mus sylvaticus. (b) In the United States, any one of several species of white-footed mice or deer-mice of the genus Vesperimus, of which V. americanus is the principal one. See Vesperimus, vesper-mouse, and cut under deer-mouse.

wood-naphtha (wùd'naf'thā), n. The commercial name of the mixture of light hydrocarbons distilled from wood.

woodness<sup>1</sup> (wùd'nes), n. [< ME. woodnesse, wodnesse, < AS. wōdnes, madness, fury, insanity (Bosworth), = MD. woodenisse = OHG. wotnissa (Stratmann); as woodl + -ness, 1.] Insanity; madness.

Yet saugh I woodnesse laughing in his rage.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, I, 1153.

Festus seide with greet voice: Paul, thou maddest, many lettris turnen thee to woodness.
Wyclif, Acts xxvi. 24.

wood-nightshade (wùd'nit'shad), n. Bittersweet, or woody nightshade. See nightshade, 1 (a).

wood-note (wùd'nót), n. A wild or natural musical tone, like that of a forest-bird, as the wood-lark, wood-thrush, or nightingale.

Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.
Milton, L'Allegro, I, 134.

wood-nut (wùd'nut), n. The European hazelnut, Corylus Avellana.

wood-nymph (wùd'nimf), n. 1. A goddess of the woods; a dryad.

By dimpled brook and fountain-brim
The wood-nymphs, deck'd with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep.
Milton, Comus, I, 120.

2. The humming-bird Thalurania glaucopis.—3. One of several zygaenid moths, of the genus Beautiful Wood-nymph (Eudryas grata), natural size.

Eudryas, as E. grata, the beautiful wood-nymph, and E. unio, the pearl wood-nymph. The larvæ of both of these species feed on the vine in the United States.

wood-offering<sup>1</sup> (wùd'off'ér-ing), n. Wood burnt on the altar.

We cast the lots among the priests, the Levites, and the people for the wood offering.
Neh. x. 34.

Pearl Wood-nymph (Eudryas unio), natural size.

wood-of-the-holy-croset, n. [Trans. of L. lignum sanctæ crucis.] A name once given to the mistletoe, Viscum album, from its reputed virtue in helping the infirmities of old age. Treas. of Bot.

wood-oil (wùd'oil), n. 1. See gurjun.—2. Same as tung-oil.—3. A product of the satinwood, Chloroxylon Swietenia.

wood-opal (wùd'ō'pal), n. Silicified wood; opalized wood. It is found in great abundance in many parts of the world, but especially in the auriferous gravels of the Sierra Nevada of California, where extensive forests have been exposed by hydraulic mining, in which the trunks of the trees have been converted into amorphous silica, or opal, which usually contains a small percentage of water, although this is not considered as being essential to its composition. Also called xylopal. See fossil wood (under woodl), and silicify.

wood-owl (wùd'oul), n. The European tawny or brown owl, Syrnium aluco, or a similar species, as the barred owl of the United States. They are earless owls, of medium to large size, the species of which are numerous and live in the woods of most parts of the world. See cut under Strix.

wood-paper (wùd'pā'pér), n. A trade-name for paper made in part or in whole of pulp prepared by chemical and mechanical means from wood. The wood employed is usually poplar, though pine, fir, basswood, and beech are largely used. By the mechanical process the wood is ground to fine powder suitable for pulp, and by the chemical process the wood, cut up into small pieces, is digested with various chemicals to free it from the sap and other useless matter, to bleach it, and to reduce it to fine, loose pulp. See pulp-digester, wood-grinder, and paper.

wood-parenchyma (wùd'pa-'rēng'ki-mā), n. A combination of wood or fiber usually classed as parenchyma, but intermediate between this and prosenchyma. Each fiber consists of three cells, one of which has flattened ends, while the other two, attached to these ends, are pointed.

wood-partridge (wùd'pār'trij), n. The Canada grouse. See grouse, wood-grouse, and cut under Canace. [Local, U. S.]

wood-pavement (wùd'pāv'mēnt), n. Pavement composed of blocks of wood: first used in London in 1839.

wood-pea (wùd'pē), n. See peal.

wood-peat (wùd'pēt), n. Peat formed in forests from decayed wood, leaves, etc. Also called forest-peat.

Nor wood-pecks, nor the swallow, harbour near.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

ity-brown, the head uniform hair-brown, the quills marked with white spots in rows of pairs. The sexual differences begin with nestlings as soon as they are fledged, contrary to one of the broadest rules in ornithology — namely, that, when the adults of opposite sexes differ decidedly in color, the young males resemble the female, and acquire their distinctive markings at maturity only. Tricolor woodpeckers, the members of the restricted genus Melanerpes, as the red-headed. See cut under Melanerpes. Yucca.—White-backed woodpecker, Picus (Dendroica) leucostictus (originally misprinted leucostictus—Reichenstein, 1902, 10 inches long, having the lower back white, extending from northwestern Europe to Manchuria, Corea, and Mongolia.—White-headed woodpecker, Xenopus rhodoceros. See Xenopus (with cut). White-rumped woodpecker, the red-headed woodpecker. See cut under Melanerpes. Latham 1782. Williamson's woodpecker, the adult male of the thyrooid woodpecker, formerly described by Dr. J. S. Newberry in 1857 as Picus williamsi, after Lieutenant R. S. Williamson, United States army.—Woodpecker hornbill, an Asiatic species of Buceros bica. Buceros pica (of Scopoli, 1786, now Antheraceros coronatus), of a black and white color, inhabiting India and Ceylon.—Yellow-bellied woodpecker, the common sapsucker; so named originally by Catesby, 1783. See sapsucker (with cut), and Sphyrapicus. Yellow-footed Persian woodpecker: (Picus luteus cyanopus perianus of Aldrovandi), the popinjay. Latham, 1782.—Yellow-fronted woodpecker, Centurus aurigrons, one of the zebra-woodpeckers, of Texas and southward, having the forehead and nasal plumes golden-yellow, the head and under parts clear ashy-gray, becoming yellowish on the belly, and the upper tail-coverts continuously white.—Yellow-necked woodpecker, Gecinys chlorolophus, a popinjay of Nepal, parts of the Himalayas, Bengal, Manipur, Assam, Burma, and the Malay peninsula. Latham, 1822.—Yellow-winged woodpecker. Same as *flicker*2.—Zebra woodpeckers. See zebra-woodpecker, and cut under Centurus.

wood-pewee (wùd'pē wē), n. A tyrannuline, or little olivaceous flycatcher, of the genus Contopus, the species of which are numerous in the warmer parts of both Americas. The common wood-pewee, C. virens, is the most abundant of its tribe in the woodlands of many parts of North America. It resembles the water-pewee, or pewit flycatcher (compare cuts under Contopus and pewit), but is smaller (only 6 or 7 inches long, and 10 or 11 in extent), with extremely small feet, and broad flat beak; the feet and upper mandible are black; the lower mandible is usually yellow; the eyes are brown; the plumage is olive-brown above, below dingy-whitish tinged with yellow and shaded with the color of the back, especially across the breast and along the sides. The nest is flatly saddled on a horizontal bough, stuccoed with lichens; the eggs are four or five in number, creamy-white, marked with reddish-brown and lilac spots usually wreathed about the larger end. The note is a long-drawn querulous whistle of two or three syllables, imitated in the word pewee. The western wood-pewee is C. r. richardsoni.

wood-pie (wùd'pī), n. The woodpecker: so called with reference to the spotted plumage; locally applied to the greater and lesser spotted woodpeckers, Picus major and P. minor, and the green woodpecker, Gecinys viridis. See cuts under Picus and popinjay. [Local, British.]

wood-pigeon (wùd'pīj'on), n. 1. The wood-culver, wood-quest, cushat, or ring-dove, Columba palumbus; also, sometimes, the stock-dove, C. anas. [Eng.]—2. In the western United States, the band-tailed pigeon, Columba fasciata. This is one of the few American pigeons congeneric with an Old World type (that figured under white-crowned being another). It is a large stout species (16 inches long and about 27 in extent), the adult male having the head, neck, and under parts vinaceous, fading to white on the crissum, the sides of the neck iridescent, a sharp white half-collar on the back of the neck (whence also called white-collared pigeon), the tail marked with a light terminal and dark subterminal bar (whence band-tailed pigeon), the bill yellow tipped with black, the feet yellow with black claws, and a red ring round the eye. It is of common but irregular distribution, chiefly in woodland, from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, feeds mainly on mast, nests in trees and bushes, and lays (as usual in this family) two white eggs.

woodpile (wùd'pīl), n. A stack or pile of wood, especially of wood for fuel.

And, take it in the autumn, what can be pleasanter than to spend a whole day on the sunny side of a barn or a wood-pile, chatting with somebody as old as one's self? Hawthorne, Seven Gables, iv.

wood-pimpernel (wùd'pim'pēr-nel), n. A European species of loosestrife, Lysimachia nemorum, somewhat resembling the common pimpernel.

wood-puceron† (wùd'pū'se-ron), n. [ $\langle$  wood<sup>1</sup> + F. puceron,  $\langle$  pucc. OF. pulex = It. pulex,  $\langle$  L. pulex, flea.] A kind of aphid or plant-louse.

wood-pulp (wùd'pulp), n. Wood-fiber reduced to a pulp, either mechanically or chemically, for use in the manufacture of paper. Almost any wood may be used; the amount of cellulose varies from 39.41 per cent. in oak to 56.99 per cent. in fir. The easily worked woods are preferred, cottonwood and other poplars being largely used in North America. The amount thus consumed in America and continental Europe is very large. Compare wood-paper.

wood-quail (wùd'kwāl), n. Any bird of the genus Rollulus; a roulroul. See cut under Rollulus.

wood-quest (wùd'kwest), n. The ring-dove, Columba palumbus; same as quest.

Me thought I saw a stock-dove, or wood-quest, I know not how to tearme it, that brought short straws to build his nest on a tall cedar. Lyly, Sapho and Phaon, iv. 3. (Nares.)

wood-rabbit (wùd'rab'it), n. The common gray rabbit of the United States, Lepus sylvaticus. See cut under cottontail.

wood-rat (wùd'rat), n. Any species of Neotoma, including large woodland rats of the United States, etc., of the family Muridae, subfamily Murinae, and section Sigmodontes, such as the Florida wood-rat, N. floridana; the Rocky Mountain wood-rat, N. cinerea; the California wood-rat, N. fuscipes; the Texas wood-rat, N. micropus; the ferruginous wood-rat of Mexico and Central America, N. ferruginea. See pack-rat (under *rat*1), and cut under Neotoma.

wood-reed (wùd'rēd), n. See *reed*1.

woodreeve (wùd'rēv), n. In England, the steward or overseer of a wood or forest.

wood-robin (wùd'rob'in), n. The American wood-thrush, Turdus mustelinus. [Local, U.S.]

wood-rock (wùd'rok), n. Ligniform asbestos.

woodruff, woodroof (wùd'ruf, -rōf), n. [Early mod. E. woodruffe;  $\langle$  ME. wodruge, woderore, woderore,  $\langle$  AS. wudurofe, wudurofe,  $\langle$  wudu, wood, + *\*rofe*, of uncertain meaning.] A rubiaceous herb, Asperula odorata, of Europe and Asiatic Russia, more fully named sweet woodruff. It has a creeping rootstock sending up erect stems, the leaves whorled, chiefly in eights, the flowers small, white, in loose cymes. The plant, from the presence of coumarin, is scented like the sweet vernal-grass and sweet-clover, and in parts of Europe it is used to flavor the spring beverage called May-drink (which see). Woodruff is sometimes found growing near German settlements in the United States. The name is extended to the other species of Asperula.—Dyers' woodruff, Asperula tinctoria, of Europe, whose roots sometimes serve in place of madder.—Quinsy-woodruff. Same as quinswort.—Sweet woodruff. See def.

wood-rush (wùd'rush), n. [ $\langle$  wood<sup>1</sup> + *rush*1, n.] A plant of the genus Luzula: also called glowworm-grass. The field wood-rush, Luzula campestris, is an extremely common low plant of Europe and North America, having clusters of brown chaffy flowers appearing early in spring; in Great Britain it is locally called blackhead, or cuckoo-grass and chimney-sweeps. A larger species, L. sylvatica, has the names wood-blades and wood-grass.

wood-sage (wùd'sāj), n. See *sage*2.

wood-sandpiper (wùd'sand'pī-per), n. A common tattler of Europe and much of the Old World, Totanus glareola, of the family Scelopax-

Wood-sandpiper, Totanus glareola.

cidæ, nearly related to the redshank and green-shank, and also to the American solitary sandpiper.

wood-sanicle (wùd'san'ī-kl), n. See sanicle.

wood-saree, n. A kind of froth seen on herbs; cuckoo-spit.

The froth which they call woodscare, being like a kind of spittle, is found but upon certain herbs, . . . as lavender, . . . sage, etc. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 497.

wood-saw (wùd'sā), n. Same as buck-saw. See cuts under saw.

wood-sawyer (wùd'sā'yér), n. In entom., same as *sawyer*4.

wood-screw (wùd'skrō), n. A screw specially made for use in fastening together parts of wooden structures or structures of wood and metal. The modern wood-screw has generally a conical point, like that of a gimlet. See cuts under countersink, screw, and screw-thread.

wood-seret (wùd'sēr), n. and a. [Also wood-seer;  $\langle$  wood<sup>1</sup> + seret, *sear*1.] I. n. The time when there is no sap in a tree. Tusser, May's Husbandry, st. 6.

II. a. Dry; barren.

The soil . . . is a poor wood-see land, very natural for the production of oaks especially. Aubrey, Misc., p. 211. (Davies.)

Wood's fusible alloy. See alloy.

woodshed (wùd'shed), n. A shed for keeping wood for fuel.

She looked so much like one of Elfie's own little dolls which she had thrown into the woodshed, out of the way, that she felt ashamed. St. Nicholas, XVIII. 288.

woodshock (wùd'shok), n. [See *woodchuck*1, applied to a different quadruped.] The pekan, fisher, or Pennant's marten, Mustela pennanti or M. canadensis, also called black-cat and black-fox. It is the largest and darkest-colored species of the genus, inhabiting North America approximately between 35° and 65° N. lat., in wooded regions of the country; it is from 2 to 3 feet long, the tail over a foot in length; the general color is black or blackish. See pekan, and cut under fisher.

wood-shrike (wùd'shrik), n. 1. The woodchat.—2. An African shrike of the genus Prionops.

wood-shrimp (wùd'shrimp), n. A boring or terebrant amphipod, of the family Cheluridae. See cut under Chelura.

Woodsia (wùd'zī-ä), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1815), named after Joseph Woods, a British botanist.] A genus of delicate polypodiaceous ferns, natives of high temperate or boreal latitudes. They are tufted ferns with the stipes often jointed and separating at the joint, and round sori borne on the back of simply forked free veins. The indusium is inferior, thin, either small and open or early bursting into irregular lobes at the top. There are 15 species, of which number 7 are found in North America. See cut under indusium.

wood-skin (wùd'skin), n. A large canoe, used by the Indians of Guiana, made from the bark of the purple heart-tree and the samari or locust-tree. Some of these canoes are large enough to carry from twenty to twenty-five persons. Stimmonds.

wood-slave (wùd'slāv), n. A Jamaican lizard, Mabouya agilis.

woodsman (wùd'sman), n.; pl. woodsmen (-men). One who dwells in or frequents the woods, as a wood-cutter, sportsman, hunter, or the like.

The sturdy woodsman.

Encyc. Brit., III. 772.

The log was white birch. . . . Woodsmen are at a loss to account for its intense and yet chaste flame, since the bark has no oily appearance.

C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 23.

Wood's metal. See metal.

wood-snail (wùd'snāl), n. A common snail of Great Britain, Helix nemoralis.

wood-snake (wùd'snāk), n. Any serpent of the family Trogonidae.

wood-snipe (wùd'snip), n. 1. The European woodcock, Scelopax rusticula: so called as distinguished from the common snipe of England (Gallinago media). See first cut under woodcock. [Local, Eng.]

The wood-snipe was considered a stupid bird.

St. James Gazette, March 14, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

2. The American woodcock, Philohela minor. See second cut under woodcock. [Virginia.]

wood-soot (wùd'sūt), n. Soot from burnt wood. It has been found useful as a manure.

Wood's operation for inguinal hernia. See operation.

wood-sorrel (wùd'sor'el), n. A plant of the genus Oxalis. The common wood-sorrel is O. acetosella. This is a low stemless species, found in damp deep shade through the north temperate zone. Its peduncles bear single delicate flowers, the petals white with light-red veins. It has the old or local names allewia, cuckoo-bread, stubbwort, etc., and it is regarded by some as the original Irish shamrock. The violet wood-sorrel, O. violacea, is a similar somewhat smaller American plant with violet petals, growing in less shaded ground. (See cut under Oxalis.) O. corniculata, the yellow wood-sorrel, having slender leafy branching stems which are erect or procumbent, with small yellow flowers, grows nearly everywhere. The leaves in this genus contain oxalic acid, and have a sourish taste. Several Mexican and South American species yield edible tuberous roots. (See oca and arracacha.) Several exotic species are cultivated in greenhouses, as O. purpurata, var. Bouvier, with abundant flowers of a deep rose-color, O. flava with yellow flowers, and O. versicolor with flowers exhibiting a pink exterior when closed, white within, opening only in sunshine: these are all from the Cape of Good Hope.

wood-sour (wùd'sour), n. [Also wood-sore, wood-sower.] The wood-sorrel, Oxalis acetosella; sometimes, the common barberry, Berberis vulgaris. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-spack (wùd'spak), n. Same as wood-spite. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-spirit (wùd'spir'it), n. Same as pyroxylic spirit. See pyroxylic.

wood-spite (wùd'spit), n. [ $\langle$  wood<sup>1</sup> + spite, var. of *sight*1.] The green woodpecker, Gecinys viridis. Also wood-spake. Willughby; Ray. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-spurge (wùd'spérj), n. See *spurge*2.

wood-stamp (wùd'stamp), n. A stamp, engraved or carved in wood, for impressing figures or colors on fabrics.

See glanular. — Woody fiber, the fiber of wood. See vegetable fibers (under fiber), wood-cell, and woody tissue, below. Woody layers. See laminar. Woody mullen, the Jerusalem sage. Phlomis frutescens.

Verbesco, wool-blade, torche-herbe, lung-woort, hares-beard, french-sage, higtaper or woolli-mullen. Florio. Woody nightshade. See nightshade, 1. (a). — Woody stem in bot., a stem of a hard or woody nature, which lasts for many years, as the trunks of trees. — Woody tissue, in bot., vegetable tissue composed chiefly of wood-cells. See wood-cell and tissue, 4.

wooder (wō'ēr), n. [Early mod. E. also wower; < ME. wowere, wowar, woware, wowere, < AS. wōgere, a wower, < wōpan, woo; see wool.] One who woos. (a) One who courts or solicits in love; a suitor.

"By my feith, frere," quod I, "ge faren lyke thise woweres That wedde none wyddes but forto welde here godis."

Piers Plowman (B4, xi. 71).

I'll mark no words that smooth-faced wowers say.

(b) One who promotes the marriage of another; a match-maker.

Wower, or he that wowythe for another. Pronuba, parnymphus.
Prompt. Parv., p. 333.

woof (wōf), n. [Altered, by initial conformity with weave, weft, web, from wof, < ME. wof, < AS. ōwef, ōwēb, ōwēb, contr. to ab, woof, < āwefan in pp. āwefen, weave, < ā + wefan, weave; see ā + wewer.] 1. The thread that is carried by the shuttle and is woven into the warp by being passed back and forth through successive sheds, or partings made in the warp or lengthwise threads by the action of heddles; the threads that run from side to side of a web; the weft.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as in the warp and the woof of textile, is more inward or more outward.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Texture; cloth; as, a pall of softest woof.

There was an awful rainbow once in heaven:
We know her woof, her texture; she is given
In the dull catalogue of common things.

Keats, Lamia, ii.

His movements were watched by hundreds of natives, . . . an exceedingly tall race, almost naked, . . . the women cinched with a woof of painted feathers or a deerskin apron.
Bancroft, Hist. U. S., i. 34.

woofy (wō'fī), a. [< woof + -y.] Having a close texture; dense; as, a woofy cloud. J. Baillie.

woohoo (wō-hō'), n. The sail-fish: same as boohoo (where see cut).

wooingly (wō'ing-li), adv. In a wooing manner; enticingly; with persuasiveness.

Heaven's breath

Smells wooingly here. Shak., Macbeth, i. 6. 6.

wookt, n. A Middle English form of wock.

wool (wūl), n. [Formerly also wooll; Se. wol; < ME. woll, wolle, wull, < AS. wall, wul = OFries. wolle, ulle = D. wol = Lit. wulle = OHG. walla, MHG. G. wolle = Icel. ull = Sw. ull = Dan. uld = Goth. wulla, wool (Teut. **wolla*, assimilated from **wolna*), = OEng. cluna = Lith. wolna = Russ. wolna = L. villus, shaggy hair, vellus, a fleece, wool, = Skt. ūrnā, wool; lit. a 'covering,' formed, with suffix -na, from a root seen in Skt. var, cover. Connection with Gr. ἔπος, wool, εἶπος, wool, ὄλος, woolly, shaggy, thick, etc., is doubtful.] 1. The fine, soft, curly hair which forms the fleece or fleecy coat of the sheep and some other animals, as the goat and alpaca, in fineness approaching fur. The wool or fleece of the sheep furnishes the most important material for clothing in all cold and temperate climates. The felting property from which wool derives its chief value, and which is its special distinction from hair, depends in part upon the kinks in the shaft or fiber, but mainly upon the scales with which the surface is imbricated. These scales are minute, from about 2,000 to nearly 4,000 to the inch, and whorled about the stem in verticils; the stem itself is extremely slender, being less than one thousandth of an inch in diameter. Wool is kept soft and pliable by the wool-oil, commonly called yolk. In different animals wool shades by imperceptible degrees into hair; and that of the sheep simply represents an extreme case of the most desirable qualities, namely, fineness, kinkiness, and scabiness of the fiber, together with its length, strength, and luster, and the copiousness of the fleece, which consists entirely of wool, without hair; in all of which particulars the wool of the different breeds of sheep varies to a degree. (Compare def. 2.) Wool when shorn is divided into two classes, short wool, or carding-wool, seldom exceeding a length of 3 or 4 inches, and long wool, or combing-wool, varying in length from 4 to 8 inches, each class being subdivided into a variety of sorts, according to the fineness and soundness of the staple. The finest wools are of short staple, and the coarser wools usually of long staple. Wools which unite a high degree of fineness and softness with considerable length of staple bear a high price. English-bred sheep produce a good, strong combing-wool, that of the Scotch breeds being somewhat harsher and coarser. The finest carding-wools were formerly exclusively obtained from Spain, the native country of the merino sheep, and at a later period extensively from Germany, where that breed had been successfully introduced and cultivated. Immense flocks of merinos are now reared in Australia, North and South America, and South Africa.

A lyttle Lomb with outen Wolle.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 264.

And softe wolle our book seith that she wroughte,
To kepen her fro slouthe and ydelnesse.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1721.

Wool is a modified form of hair, distinguished by its slender, soft, and wavy or curly structure, and by the highly imbricated or serrated surface of its filaments.

Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 653.

2. The fine, short, thick underfur or down of any animal, as distinguished from the longer and stiffer hairs which come to the surface of the pelage. Most hairy animals have at least two coats, one of long and comparatively straight, stout, stiff hairs, the other of wool. See underfur.

In that Contree ben white Hennes withouten Fetheres;
but thei beren white Wolle, as Scheep don here.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 208.

Lye of newt and toe of frog,

Wool of bat and tongue of dog.

Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 15.

3. The short, crisp, curly or kinky hair of the head of some persons, as negroes; humorously, the hair of any person's head. [Colloq.]

From a strange freak of nature, not unusual in these Virginian mountains, his knotty wool was of a pale taw-color.

Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 203.

4. Any light, downy, fleecy, or flocculent substance resembling wool. (a) The dense furry or woolly coat of many insects, as the pubescence covering the moths known as millers, that on various caterpillars, that spun by various larvae for a case or cocoon, etc. Secretions of various insects are very nicely graded from a solid waxy consistency through various frothy states to a light dry fleecy condition resembling wool: see wax-insect, spittle-insect, and woolly aphid (under woolly). In another large class of cases the spun-out secretion is gossamer, cobweb, or true silk. See these words, and silkworm. (b) In bot.: (1) A sort of down or pubescence, or a clothing of dense curling hairs, on the surface of certain plants. (2) The fiber of the cotton-plant, commonly called cotton-wool. — Angora wool, the wool of the Angora goat, from which angora is made. — Berlin wool, a kind of fine dyed wool used for worsted-work, knitting, etc. It is harder and closer than zephyr-wool. — Camel's wool, mohair. — Cape wool, a somewhat inferior variety of wool brought from the Cape of Good Hope. — Carding-wool, wool of short fiber worked upon a carding-machine. It is distinguished from combing-wool, which has a long fiber and is prepared for spinning by combing. — Dyed in the wool, tinged in the fiber; hence, permanent; lasting; not liable to fade or change; thorough; out-and-out; as, a dyed-in-the-wool democrat. [U. S.] — Fleece-wools. See fleece, 1. — German wool. Same as Berlin wool. — Glass wool, a mass of fine filaments of glass forming together a cotton-like substance similar to mineral wool. — Great cry and little wool, much cry and little wool. See cry.

And so his hyghnes shal have theroff but as hadd the man that sherd is hogge, much cry and litill wool.

Sir John Fortescue (c. 1475), On the Government of England, x., quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 186.

But if you compare his threatenings and his after-affections you would say of them, as that wise man shearing his hogs: Here is a great deal of cry, but a little wool.

Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 477.

Hamburg wool, one of the varieties of German or Berlin wool made for fancy work. — Hand-washed wool, wool washed before the sheep were shorn. — Holmgren's wools, skeins of wool of different colors used as tests for color-blindness. — Laid wool, wool from sheep which had been smeared with tar and butter as a protection from the rigor of winter. — Leviathan wool. See leviathan. — Long wool. See def. 1. — Mineral wool. See mineral. — More squeak than wool, more noise than substance. [Colloq.]

For matter of title he thought there was more squeak than wool. Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 17. (Davies.)

Philosopher's wool, philosophic wool. See philosophic. — Pine wool, pine-needle wool. See pine-needle. — Scoured wool. See scour. — Shetland wool, a thin hairy undyed and very tenacious and strong worsted, spun in the Shetland Islands from the wool of the native sheep, and very extensively used in the knitting of fine shawls and other garments. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 127. — Spanish wool, wool impregnated with rouge. — To pull the wool over one's eyes, to deceive or delude one; throw dust in one's eyes; prevent one from seeing clearly in any way. — Wool-bundling machine, a machine for compressing and tying fleeces into bundles; a fleece-folder or wool-packer. — Wool in the grease, the technical name for wool which has not been cleaned either before or after shearing. (See also cinder-wool, cotton-wool, dead-wool, lamb's-wool, skin-wool, slag-wool.)

wool (wūl), v. t. [< wool, n.] To pull the hair off, in sport or anger; rumple or tousle the hair of. [Colloq., U. S.]

wool-ball (wūl'bāl), n. A ball of wool, especially such as is found in the stomach of sheep and other animals.

wool-bearing (wūl'bār'ing), a. Producing wool; having a fleece, as the sheep.

wool-bladet, n. A plant, apparently the mullein. See quotation at woody mullein (under woody).

wool-burler (wūl'bēr'lēr), n. One who burls wool or woollen cloth. See burl, v. t.

wool-carder (wūl'kār'dēr), n. One who cards wool. See wool-carding.

wool-carding (wūl'kār'ding), n. The process of separating the fibers of wool and laying them parallel preparatory to spinning. See card, 2, and carding, 2.

wool-cleaner (wūl'klē'nēr), n. A machine for beating, shaking, and cleaning wool previous to scouring and dyeing; a wool-duster or wool-picker.

wool-comber (wūl'kō'mēr), n. One employed in wool-combing.

wool-combing (wūl'kō'ming), n. The act or process of separating the fibers of wool, especially long-fibered wool, and laying them parallel as in wool-carding. See comb, 1 and combing.

woold (wōld), v. t. [With excrement d, < D. woelen, wind, wrap, = OHG. woelen, MHG. wuelen, G. wühlen, stir, move, wallow, etc.; cf. wallow.] Naut., to wind; particularly, to wind (a rope) round a mast or yard, when made of two or more pieces, at the place where they are fished, for the purpose of confining and supporting them.

woolder (wōl'dēr), n. [< woold + -er.] 1. Naut., a stick used in woolding. — 2. In ropemaking, one of the pins passing through the top, and forming a handle to it. See top, 3, 2.

wool-driver (wūl'drī'vēr), n. One who buys wool in different parts of a sheep-raising country, and brings it for sale to the woollen-mill or market. [Great Britain.]

wool-dryer (wūl'drī'ēr), n. A machine for drying wool which has been washed, dyed, etc.

wool-duster (wūl'dus'tēr), n. A machine for removing impurities from wool by means of beaters.

wool-dyed (wūl'did), a. Dyed in the wool — that is, before spinning or weaving: as wool-dyed cloth.

woolen, woollen (wūl'en), a. and n. [< ME. wullen, wullen, < AS. wyllen (= OHG. wullin, MHG. G. wollen), woolen, < wul, wool, + -en: see wool, n.] 1. a. 1. Made of wool; consisting of wool: as, woolen cloth. Bacon.

On a poure beggar put a scherte,
And wollen wedys that warm will last.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 214.

2. Of or pertaining to wool: as, woolen manufactures. — 3. Clad in the rough, homespun serges of former times, as opposed to the silk, velvet, and fine linen of the wealthier classes; hence, coarse; boorish; rustic; vulgar.

Woolen vassals, things created

To buy and sell with goats. Shak., Cor., iii. 2. 9.

Woolen-back satin, satin of which the back is composed of linsey-woolsey: it is durable and not liable to crease. Dict. of Needlework. — Woolen plush, a plush with a woolen pile. — Woolen velvet, a general name for a woolen cloth with velvet texture. See astrakhan, beaver, Utrecht velvet (under velvet), and velvet.

II. n. Cloth made of wool, or chiefly of wool: an abbreviation of woolen cloth.

I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen. Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 33.

The pre-existence under concrete forms of the woollens, silks, and cottons we wear, we can trace some distance back.

H. Spencer, First Principles, § 93.

woolen-cord (wūl'en-kōrd), n. A kind of corduroy, or ribbed stuff, of which the face is wholly of wool.

woolen-draper (wūl'en-drā'pēr), n. A dealer in woolen cloths of different kinds; especially, a retail dealer in woollens for men's wear.

woolenette, woollenette (wūl-e-net'), n. [< wool + dim. -ette.] A trade-name for a variety of woolen cloth.

woolen-matlassé (wūl'en-mat-las'ā), n. Woolen cloth woven with flowers and other patterns in a light matlassé silk. It is used for women's outer garments.

Canarese ukku (pron. wukku), steel.] The name given to steel made in India by fusing iron with carbonaceous matter. This is done in small crucibles holding a pound or two of the iron, and the wood selected to furnish the carbon to the metal is always that of Cassia auriculata, which is cut into small pieces, the same being done with the iron, and the whole covered by one or more green leaves, usually of a species of Convolvulus, the crucible being then covered with a lid of clay. A number of these crucibles are placed together in a hole dug in the ground, and heated in a charcoal fire urged by a pair of bellows made of ox-hide, the blast being kept up for three or four hours. The steel thus obtained is hard in temper, and requires much care in working. This is the oldest method of making steel of which anything definite is known, having been in use, without change, for an indefinite length of time, and being, as generally believed, original with the Hindus.

A sound, or combination of sounds, used in any language as the sign of a conception, or of a conception together with its grammatical relations; the smallest bit of human language forming a grammatical part of speech; a vocable; a term. A word may be any part of speech, as verb, noun, particle, etc.; it may be radical, as love, or derivative, as lover, lovely, loveliness, or an inflected form, as loves, loved; it may be simple, or compound, as love-sick. Anything is a word that can be used as an individual member of a sentence, and that is not separable into parts usable independently and coordinately in making a sentence. A word is a spoken sign that has arrived at its value as used in any language by a series of historical changes, and that holds its value by virtue of usage, being exposed to such further changes, of form and of meaning, as usage may prescribe. The conception involved in a word may be of any grade, from the simplest, as one, to the most derived and complicated, as political, and the grammatical relations involved may also be of any degree, from true to untruthfulness, or from (Latin) ama to amabitur.

Such a piece of work is called a working-up job. — To work water. See the quotation.

Water is also frequently carried over from the boiler with the steam. When this occurs the boiler is said to prime, or to work water. Forney, Locomotive, p. 170.

work (wèrk), n. [< ME. work, werk, werc, worc, were, weore, < AS. weorc, wore, were = OS. OFries. D. werk = LG. werk = OHG. werch, werah, MHG. werc, G. werk = Icel. Sw. verk = Dan. værk = Goth. ga-waurki; cf. Gr. ἔργον, work; see work, v.] 1. Effort or exertion directed to the accomplishment of some purpose or end; expenditure of strength, energy, etc.; toil; labor; striving.

Fie upon this quiet life! I want work. Shak., I Hen. IV., ii. 4. 118.

Man hath his daily work of body or mind Appointed. Milton, P. L., iv. 618.

Here, work enough to watch The Master work, and catch Hints of the proper craft. Browning, Rabbi Ben Ezra.

2. Opportunity of expending labor (physical or mental) in some useful or remunerative way, especially as a means of earning a livelihood; employment; something to do: as, to be out of work; to look for work. — 3. That upon which one is employed or engaged, and in the accomplishment of which labor is expended or some operation performed; a task, undertaking, enterprise, or project.

If it would please Him whose worke it is to direct me to speake such a word over the sea as the good old woman of Abel did over the wall in the like exigent. N. Ward, Simple Candler, p. 33.

The great work of erecting a way of worshipping of Christ in church fellowship. N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 160.

They have a Salt Work, and with that salt preserve the fish they take. Capt. John Smith, Gen. Hist. Virginia
(Ashe's Eng. Garner, II, 285.)

Whereupon he gott a patent of the king (Cha. I.) for an allum werke (which was the first that ever was in England), which was worth to him two thousand pounds per annuin, or better. Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Chaloner).

10. In work,: an The product of a force by the component displacement of its point of application in the direction of the force; or, if this is variable, the integral of all successive infinitesimal such products for any motion of the point of application. The work is thus the same whatever be the velocity of the motion or the mass moved, so long as the force and the displacement are the same. Thus, if an electrified body is moved by an electrical force along a horizontal surface, the work is the same whatever the mass of the body moved. But if the same electrical force moves the body for the same distance but upward against gravity, less work on the whole is done, since the force of gravity undoes a part of the work which the electrical force performs. Negative work, or work undone, is also called resistant work, in contradistinction to motor work. The total work performed upon a particle is equivalent to the kinetic energy it gains; the total work undone, to the kinetic energy it loses. If a force is resisted by friction, the same amount of work is done as if it were not resisted; for, though the resultant force upon the mass moved is less by the amount of the friction, so that less work is done upon the mass as a whole, yet heat is produced, and the particles receive displacements in the direction of the action of friction, the work of which makes up the balance. Mechanical work is work done in the displacement of sensible masses, as opposed to work done in the displacement of molecules. If a gun is shot off in a horizontal direction, a force is brought to bear upon the bullet, and in carrying this a certain distance work proportional to the acceleration is performed; at the same time, the heat of the confined gases is reduced by a proportional amount, and heat is said to be transformed into mechanical work.

We have thus arrived at the immensely important conclusion that no heat-engine can convert into work a greater fraction of the heat which it receives than is expressed by the excess of the temperature of reception above that of rejection divided by the absolute temperature of rejection. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 482.

(b) The negative of the work as defined above. In this sense a ball shot upward is said to do work by removing itself from the attracting earth. [Both these uses of the word work were introduced by Clausius, first in German.]

11. In physics and chem., the production of any physical or chemical change. For example, if a body is heated, the effects are said to be the internal work of increasing the kinetic molecular energy—that is, increase of temperature—of change of volume, cohesive elasticity and the external work involved in its expansion, and hence overcoming the surrounding atmospheric pressure. An example of work in the chemical sense is that done when a chemical compound is decomposed, as by an electrical current in electrolysis. See further under energy, 7.

12. In mining, ores before they are cleaned and dressed.—13. pl. The mechanism or effective part of some mechanical contrivance, such as a watch.—14. Manner of working; management; treatment.

It is pleasant to see what work our adversaries make with this innocent canon: sometimes 'tis a mere forgery of hereticks, and sometimes the bishops . . . were not so wise as they should have been. Stillingfleet.

Accommodation works. See accommodation.—Advanced works, works placed beyond the covered ways and glacis of a permanent fortification, but in defensive relations with it. When placed beyond the range of small arms such works are termed detached works.—Agra work, an inlay of hard stones, such as agates and carnelians, and other costly materials in white marble, made at Agra in British India.—Bareilly work, woodwork decorated in black and gold lacquer, made in the Northwestern Provinces of India.—Beaten work. See beaten.—Berlin work, fancy work on canvas in Berlin wools or worsted.—Best work. See best.—Bone-work. Same as bone-lace.—Carnul work, decoration by means of lacquer painted with flowers in slight relief on a green ground, gold being freely used: from Carnul, or Kurnul, a town of India.—Cashmere work, a kind of metal-work in which copper or brass is deeply engraved, and the engraved lines are filled wholly or in part with a black composition like niello; small raised flowers of white metal are then applied to the surface in connection with the design engraved upon the body of the piece. — Combed-out

In the more elaborate sorts, a network of threads is fastened down upon a piece of linen lawn, the pattern is stitched (usually in buttonhole-stitch) upon the lawn, and after its completion the threads of the network and some of those of the lawn are pulled out and parts of the lawn cut away. — Embossed-velvet work. See velvet. — External work. See external used below. — False work. See false.

There are voices and a sound of tools, and we come to a wooden staging, or false work, and climb a short ladder, and stand close to the roof among a group of workmen.

The Century, XXXIX, 221.

Fancy, fat, frosted work. See the adjectives—Gnarled work. Same as gnarling. Granulated work. See granulated. Hammered work. See hammered.

Hiroshima work, fine decorative metal-work made in Japan, in which various ornamental appliances are combined. The name is derived from the town of Hiroshima, where much of the finest has been made.—Holbein work, a kind of embroidery done in modern times in imitation of decorative borders and the like shown in paintings of Holbein and other artists of his time. The design is in outline without filling in, and consists of borders and other patterns of slight scrolls, zigzags, etc. It is worked especially with thread on washable material, and has the advantage of showing alike on both sides.

Honeycomb work. See honeycomb. — Incrusted work. See incrusted. — Internal work. In physics, work done among the molecules of a body upon change of temperature, as in increasing their velocity, changing their relative position, etc.: contrasted with external work, that done against external forces as the body changes in volume.

in engraving on onyx.—SPANISH WORK, embroidery of simple character, such as that done upon pillow-cases and table-cloths: a term of the seventeenth century.—SPIRITUAL AND CORPORAŁ WORKS OF MERCY, S —Spiritual and corporal works of mercy. See works of mercy.—Stamped work. See stamp.—Swedish work. See Swedish.—Tabular work. Same as table-work.—Tamil work ornamental metal-work containing musical notation.

Tamil work, ornamental metal-work, containing much filigree, made in Ceylon, especially in the northern part of the island.—Tessellated work. See tessellated.—Tie work a kind of fancy work by which fringes are made.

The workability of compulsory notification would depend on the general practitioners. Lancet, 1890, II. 21.

workable (wér'ká-bl), a. [< work + -able.] 1. That can be worked, or that is worth working; as, a workable mine; workable coal. The term workable, as applied to coal, has two meanings: one refers to the maximum limit of depth, the other to the minimum limit of thickness of the bed or beds. In the report of the English Royal Commission appointed in 1896, the limit of workable depth was taken as 4,000 feet, that of thickness at 1 foot. But no coal has yet been worked to so great a depth as that, and it has only very rarely happened that a seam of less than 2 feet in thickness has been actually mined.

Clay . . . soft and workable. Ascham, Toxophilus, ii.

I apprehend that the Commissioners [the English of 1896] placed the limit of thickness as low as 12 inches because their inquiries were not in that connection directed to the question what amount of coal would ultimately be found commercially workable; it was the simple physical limits which they were chiefly regarding.

Marshall, Coal: its Hist. and Uses, p. 307.

2. Practicable; feasible: as, a workable scheme for lighting the streets.—3. Capable of being stirred or influenced.

These have nimble feet, forward affections, hearts workable to charity. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 410.

4. Capable of being set at work.

At the time of taking the last census there were very nearly seven millions of wives and children of a workable age still unoccupied.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 358.

workableness (wér'ká-bl-nes), n. Practicableness; feasibility.

That fair trial which alone can test the workableness of any new scheme of social life. J. S. Mill, Socialism.

workaday (wér'ká-dā), n. and a. [Formerly also workday. (< f. workday.)] I. n. A working-day.

Trade, I cashier thee till to-morrow; friend Onion, for thy sake I finish this workday.

B. Jonson, Case is Altered, iv. 3.

We find a great Deference paid to Saturday Afternoon, above the other worky-days of the Week.

Bourne's Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 145.

II. a. Working-day; relating to workdays; plodding; toiling.

Your face shall be tann'd

Like a sailor's worky-day hand.

Middleton and Rowley, Spanish Gypsy, iv. 1.

Work-a-day humanity.

Dickens, Uncommercial Traveller, iv.

This is a workaday, practical world, and . . . we must face things as they are. The Century, XXXIX. 630.

work-bag (wér'ká-bag), n. A small bag of some textile material, formerly carried by women, and used to contain their needlework. The term was often used for the reticule.

The lawful fine of the pledged work-bag of the king's wife. O'Curry, Anc. Irish, II. xxiv.

work-basket (wér'ká-bas'ket), n. A basket used by women either to hold the implements for sewing, as needles, thread, scissors, or thimble, in which case the basket is small, or to hold partly made garments, articles needing repair, etc., for which use the basket is large and has a wide opening.

On the table is . . . Elizabeth's workbasket.

Rhoda Broughton, Alas, xxxiv.

work-box (wér'ká-boks), n. A box used by women to hold their materials for sewing and the needlework itself when not too bulky.

Here, lately shut, that work-box lay;

There stood your own embroidery frame.

F. Locker, The Castle in the Air.

workday (wér'ká-dā), n. and a. [< ME. werkdai, werkedai, workday, werkedah, workday, working-day, < AS. weorc-day (= G. werk-tag, werket-tag = Icel. verkdagr); as work + day<sup>1</sup>.] I. n. A working-day; a week-day.

For a-pon the werkeday

Men be so byss in vche way,

So that for here occupacyone

They leue myche of here deuocoyone.

Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests (E. E. T. S.), I. 1005.

II. a. Of or pertaining to a working-day or working-days.

Allow me my friends, my freedom, my rough companions, in their work-day clothes. Thackeray, Philip, vi.

worked-off (wérkt'ót'), a. In printing, noting a form of type from which a required edition has been printed.

worker (wér'kér), n. [*< ME. *worker, worcher; < work + -er<sup>1</sup>.*] 1. One who or that which works; a laborer; a toiler; a performer; a doer.

False apostles, deceitful workers. 2 Cor. xi. 13.

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new:

That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

With co-partnership between employer and employed, the worker would feel he was more nearly the equal of the capitalist. N. A. Rev., CXLII. 615.

2. In entom., the neuter or undeveloped female of various social hymenopterous and a few other insects, as bees, ants, and termites, which collect pollen, makes honey, builds or fabricates cells or a nest, stores up food, cares for the young, herds and milks the aphids kept as cows, and performs other services for the community of which it is a member. Among bees the worker is distinguished from the queen and the drone, or the perfect female and male. Among ants certain of the workers are specialized and specified as soldiers; these make war and capture slaves. See cuts under Apis, Atta, Monomorium, Termites, and umbrellant.

3†. Maker; creator.

And therfor in the worcher was the vyce,
And in the covetour that was so vyce.

Chaucer, Complaint of Mars, l. 361.

4. In a carding-machine, one of the urchins, or small card-covered cylinders.—5. A leather-workers' two-handled knife, used in scraping hides.

worker-ant (wér'kér-ant), n. A working ant. See worker, 2.

worker-bee (wér'kér-bē), n. A working bee. See worker, 2.

worker-bobbin (wér'kér-bob'in), n. In lace-making, one of the bobbins that are kept passing from side to side, as distinguished from a hanger-bobbin, the thread of which is left stationary while the other threads pass over and under it.

worker-cell (wér'kér-sel), n. One of the cells of a honeycomb destined for the larva of a worker-bee. Eggs are laid in these first, afterward in the drone-cells and queen-cells.

workfellow (wérk'fel'ō), n. One engaged in the same work with another. Rom. xvi. 21.

work-folk, work-folks (wérk'fok, wérk'fōks), n. pl. Persons engaged in manual labor; workpeople.

Oversee my work-folks.

And at the week's end pay them all their wages.

Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, ii. 1.

workful (wérk'fúl), a. [< ME. workvol; < work + -ful.] Full of activity and work; laborious; industrious. [Rare.]

You saw nothing in Coketown but what was severely workful.

Dickens, Hard Times, I. 5.

workgirl (wérk'gèrl), n. A girl or young woman who works or is engaged in some useful manual employment.

There are men and women working perpetually for every other possible class, but none for the workgirl.

Nineteenth Century, XXII. 371.

In the establishment were seated nine workgirls.

Lancet, 1890, II. 951.

work-holder (wérk'hól'dér), n. A device for holding a fabric in a convenient position for needlework. It consists usually of spring-jaws for holding the material, and a clamp for securing the holder to the edge of a table. Compare sewing-bird.

workhouse (wérk'hous), n. [< late ME. werke-house, AS. weorc-hūs; as work + house<sup>1</sup>, n.] 1. A house in which work is carried on; a manufactory.

Protagenes . . . had his workhouse in a garden out of town.

Dryden, Obs. on Dufresnoy's Art of Painting.

But, indeed, that which most surprised me in the Louvre was the Attellier or Work-house of Monsieur Gerardon: he that made Cardinal Richelieu's Tomb, and the Statua Equestris designed for the Place de Vendôme.

Lister, Journey to Paris, p. 43.

2. A house in which able-bodied paupers are compelled to work; a poorhouse. Under the old poor-laws of England there was a workhouse in each parish, partaking of the character of a bridewell, where indigent, vagrant, and idle people were set to work, and supplied with food and clothing, or what is termed indoor relief. Some workhouses were used as places of confinement for rogues and vagabonds, who were there confined and compelled to labor; whilst others were large almshouses for the maintenance and support of the poor. In the United States the workhouses or poorhouses are sometimes under the charge of the county, sometimes under that of the town or township.

Our Laws have wisely determin'd that Work-houses are the best Hospitals for the Poor who are able to help themselves.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

A miser who has amassed a million suffers an old friend and benefactor to die in a work-house, and cannot be questioned before any tribunal.

Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

This poor old shaking body has to lay herself down every night in her workhouse bed by the side of some other old woman with whom she may or may not agree.

Thackeray, On some Carp at Sans Souci.

workhouse-sheeting (wérk'hous-shē'ting), n. Stout twilled cotton cloth, used for the roughest service, and occasionally as a ground for embroidery.

working (wér'king), n. [< ME. werking, werkynge, warkynge, workinge; verbal n. of work,

r.] 1. Action; operation: as, the workings of fancy.

Thei ben square and poynted of here owne kynde, bothe aboven and benethen, with outen workinge of mannes hond.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 158.

For mankind they say a Woman was made first, which by the working of one of the gods conceived and brought forth children. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 95.

The working of my own mind is the general entertainment of my life. Steele, Spectator, No. 4.

The proposition does not strike one; on the contrary, it seems to run opposite to the natural workings of causes and effects. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, viii. 5.

The head which owns this bounteous fall of hazel curls is an excellent little thinking machine, most accurate in its working.

Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxxv.

2. Method of operation; doing.

All his working nas but fraude and deceit.

Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 356.

3. Fermentation; as, the working of yeast.—

4. pl. The parts of a mine, quarry, or open-work in which, or near which, mining or quarrying is actually being carried on. The abandoned portions of a mine are generally designated as "old workings," and in Cornwall as the "old man."

The men hurried from different parts of the workings to be out of the way of an impending blast.

Geikie, Geol. Sketches, i.

Close to the mouth of the Kennet, gravel has been extracted for many years, as shown by the old workings.

Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLVI. 590.

5. The process which goes on in water when it blossoms. See work, v. i., 8.—Batch-working, in teleg., a system of working in which every station in turn sends several (usually five or more) messages at a time, before giving place to another station.—Closed-circuit working, that method of operating telegraph-lines in which the battery-circuit is always closed throughout the line, except when broken by the operation of the sending-key during the transmission of messages.—Double-current working. See double.—Line-current working, that method of operation in which the receiving instruments on a telegraph-circuit are worked directly, without the intervention of a relay.—Open-circuit working, that method of operating a telegraph-circuit in which the battery is not in contact with the line between messages.—Open working. Same as openwork, 3.—Single working, in teleg., the sending of messages in one direction only at one time.—Up-and-down working, on a telegraph-circuit, the transmission of messages alternately between stations at the opposite ends of a line.

working (wér'king), p. a. [Ppr. of work, r.] 1. Active; busy.

I know not her intent; but this I know,

He has a working brain, is minister

To all my lady's counsels.

Ford, Love's Sacrifice, iii. 2.

He was of a middle stature; strong set; curled hair; a very working head, in so much that, walking and meditating before dinner, he would eat up a penny loaf, not knowing that he did it. Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Fuller).

2. Engaged in physical toil or manual labor as a means of livelihood; laboring: as, working people. Compare working-man.—3. Connected with the carrying on of some undertaking or business: as, working expenses.

working-beam (wér'king-bēm), n. In mach. See beam, 2 (i).

working-class (wér'king-klās), n. A collective name for those who earn their bread by manual labor, such as mechanics and laborers; generally used in the plural.

working-day (wér'king-dā), n. and a. I. n. 1. Any day on which work is ordinarily performed, as distinguished from Sundays and holidays.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days; your grace is too costly to wear every day.

Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 341.

2. That part of the day which is devoted or allotted to work or labor; the period each day in which work is actually carried on: as, a working-day of eight hours.

II. a. Relating to days on which work is done, as opposed to Sundays and holidays; hence, plodding; laborious.

O, how full of briers is this working-day world!

Shak., As you Like it, i. 3. 12.

working-drawing (wér'king-drā'ing), n. A drawing or plan, as of the whole or part of a structure or machine, drawn to a specified scale, and in such detail as to form a guide for the construction of the object represented.

working-face (wér'king-fās), n. See face<sup>1</sup>, 15 (a).

working-house (wér'king-hous), n. A workshop; a factory.

In the quick forge and working-house of thought.

Shak., Hen. V., v., Prol., l. 23.

working-man (wér'king-man), n. A laboring man; one who earns his living by manual labor.—Working-men's party, any political party organized in the interests of working-men. Such parties are also often called labor-reform parties.

working-out (wörk'ing-out), n. The process of working out, or the result of working out, as of a problem, a plan, a theory, etc.

working party (wörk'ing-pär'ti), n. A party of workers, or a party of workers engaged in a particular task, as of a road, a canal, etc.

working plan (wörk'ing-plan), n. Some plan or scheme for working out, or for carrying out, a project, as of a road, a canal, etc.

working point (wörk'ing-pöint), n. In geol., a point of view, or a point of observation, from which the effect of a force, or the result of a process, is observed.

working rod (wörk'ing-röd), n. Same as working rod. work lead (wörk'ing-läd), n. In geol., the lead of a fault, or the distance between the surface of a fault and the surface of the rock to which it is attached. workman (wörk'män), n. A man who is engaged in manual labor, whether skilled or unskilled; a worker; a laborer; specifically, an artificer, mechanic, or artisan; a handicraftsman.

workless (wörk'les), a. [work + -less.] 1. Without work, or without labor; unoccupied; as, a workless man. 2. Without work, or without labor; as, a workless day.

workman (wörk'män), n.; pl. workmen (-men). [ME. workman, workman, workman, workman.] 1. A man who is engaged in manual labor, whether skilled or unskilled; a worker; a laborer; specifically, an artificer, mechanic, or artisan; a handicraftsman.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), a. [workman + -like.] 1. Like or worthy of a workman; as, a workmanlike manner. 2. In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), adv. [workmanlike, a.] In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), a. [workman + -like.] 1. Like or worthy of a workman; as, a workmanlike manner. 2. In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), adv. [workmanlike, a.] In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), a. [workman + -like.] 1. Like or worthy of a workman; as, a workmanlike manner. 2. In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), adv. [workmanlike, a.] In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), a. [workman + -like.] 1. Like or worthy of a workman; as, a workmanlike manner. 2. In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), adv. [workmanlike, a.] In a workmanlike manner.

workmanlike (wörk'män-lik), a. [workman + -like.] 1. Like or worthy of a workman; as, a workmanlike manner. 2. In a workmanlike manner.

To live secure. Milton, P. L., xi. 803.

Worldly or dissolute. Milton, P. L., xi. 803.

Interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden. (Johnson.)

=Syn. 1. Mundane, terrestrial, sublunary.—1 and 3. Worldly, Secular, Temporal, Earthly, Unspiritual, Carnal. Worldly means of the world, in fact or in spirit, in distinction from that which is above the world; as applying to mind, it indicates a pleasure in the things that belong to the external life and a disregard of spiritual or even intellectual pleasures: it is opposed to spiritual, expressing positively what unspiritual expresses negatively.

Secular is opposed to sacred or to ecclesiastical: as, there are six secular days in the week; the secular arm. Secular and temporal are rarely used in a bad sense. Temporal is opposed to spiritual or eternal: as, lords temporal; merely temporal concerns. Earthly has, like worldly, the sense of mundane, but in the sense of unspirituality it suggests more of grossness or groveling, a thought which is carried still further by earthy, although earthy is not often used in that sense. Carnal suggests that which belongs to the gratification of the animal nature; it ranges from the merely unspiritual to the sensual. See sensual and temporal.

wormpipe

wormpipe (wɜrm'pɪp), n. The worm of a still.

The gas then in its passage through the worm-pipe of the condenser (which is always surrounded with cold water) is condensed.

[See Dict., IV. 727.]

worm-powder (wɜrm'pou dər), n. A powder used for expelling worms from the intestinal canal or other open cavities of the body.

worm-punch (wɜrm'pʌntʃ), n. A small, rather slender punch, used by coopers for clearing out worm-holes in staves or heads of casks, for the purpose of stopping the holes with wooden plugs to prevent leaking.

worm-rack (wɜrm'rak), n. A rack gearing with a worm-wheel. The teeth are set obliquely, corresponding in obliquity with the pitch of the worm. See cut under rack, 6.

worm-safe (wɜrm'säf), n. A locked chamber containing a hydrometer, and attached to the worm of a still in such manner that a fractional part of the liquor distilled trickles into it from the worm. The mean specific gravity of the liquor is indicated by the hydrometer.

wormseed (wɜrm'sēd), n. 1. Same as santonica. See santonica and santonin.

Worm-seede [cometh] from Persia.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. i. 278.

2. The fruit of the American herb Chenopodium ambrosioides, especially var. anthelminticum, which is often reckoned a distinct species; also, the plant itself. The seed is an official as well as a popular vermifuge. It yields wormseed-oil (which see), and is also given in the form of a powder. Distinguished as American wormseed; also called Mexican tea.

3. The treacle-mustard, Erysimum cheiranthoides, or primarily its seed, which was formerly a popular vermifuge in England. Also treacle-wormseed. — American wormseed. See def. 2. Barbary wormseed, the heads of species of Artemisia growing in Syria and Arabia, used like santonica. Levant wormseed. See santonica. — Oil of wormseed. See oil and wormseed-oil. Spanish wormseed, a chenopodiaceous plant, Salsola (Haloxylon, Caragoblan) tamariscifolia, or particularly its seed, which is used as an anthelmintic. — Treacle-wormseed. See def. 3.

wormseed-mustard (wɜrm'sēd-mus'tjərd), n. See mustard.

wormseed-oil (wɜrm'sēd-oil), n. A volatile oil obtained from wormseed. It is probably without active medicinal properties.

worm-shaft (wɜrm'shaft), n. The screw-threaded shaft which engages the teeth of a worm-gear or worm-wheel.

worm-shaped (wɜrm'shapt), a. Having the form of a worm; vermiform; vermicular.

worm-shell (wɜrm'shel), n. A mollusk of the family Vermetidae, or its shell: so called from the long twisted or vermiform shape of the shell. See cut under Vermetes.

worms'-meat (wɜrmz'mēt), n. Food for worms; dead flesh. [Rare.]

I am dead

Already, girl; and so is she and he;

We are all worms' meat now.

Beau. and Fl., Laws of 'Andy, v. 1.

worm-snake (wɜrm'snäk), n. 1. A blindworm; a worm-like angiotomatous or scolecophidian snake of the suborder Typhlopoida; a ground-snake, as Carphophis (or Celuta) amœna. — 2. Same as snake-worm.

worm-tea (wɜrm'tē), n. A decoction of some plant, generally a bitter plant, used as an anthelmintic.

worm-track (wɜrm'trak), n. Same as worm-east, 2.

wormul (wɜrm'mul), n. Same as warble, 3.

worm-wheel (wɜrm'hwel), n. A wheel which gears with an endless or tangent screw or worm, receiving or imparting motion. By this means a powerful effect with a diminished rate of motion is communicated from one revolving shaft to another. See tangent screw (under tangent), endless screw (under endless, with cut); also cuts under Hindley's screw (at screw) and under steam-engine.

wormwood (wɜrm'wud), n. [< ME. wormwood, an altered form, simulating worm + wood], of the earlier vermode, vermod, wormod, < AS. wermōd = MD. wermōd, wermōet, wermōt, wermōde, wermōde, warmōt, warmōde, etc., = OHG. wermuota, wermōte, wermuota, wormuota, MHG. wermuot, wermūete, G. wermuth (> F. vermout), wormwood; formation uncertain; appar. lit. 'keep-mind,' preserver of the mind, from a supposed belief in its medicinal virtues (so hellebore was called in AS. wēdeberge, preservative against madness). < AS. werman (= D. werden, werden = MHG. werden, G. werden, etc.), defend, protect, keep, + mōd, mood, mind: see wear<sup>2</sup> and mood]. A somewhat woody perennial herb, Artemisia Absinthium, native in Europe and Asiatic Russia, found in old gardens and by roadsides in North America. This plant is proverbial for its bitterness, and was in medicinal use among the ancients. It is of a highly tonic property, and is still used in Europe for weak digestion; it was formerly employed for intermittents and some other troubles, and was once regarded as a vermifuge. It is very largely consumed, with a few other species, in preparing the absinthe beverage of the French. (See absinthe and absinthium (with cut)). The name is extended to the genus, or particularly to species closely related to this; various species have their own names, as southernwood, mayweed, tar-ragon, santonica, and sagebrush.

The source Almaunde, & vermode, & feyn greeke, Frote hem yere asmoche as wol suffice.

Palladius, Hushondrie (L. E. T. S.), p. 196.

These for frenzy be
A speedy and a sovereign remedy,
The bitter wormwood, sage, and marigold.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, ii. 2.

Figuratively — 2. Bitterness.

Weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain.

Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 857.

Sir, with this truth

You mix such wormwood that you leave no hope

For my disorder'd palate e'er to relish

A wholesome taste again. Ford, Perkin Warbeck, i. 2.

His presence and his communications were gall and wormwood to his once partial mistress.

Scott, Kenilworth, xi.

Biennial wormwood, Artemisia biennis, a weed of the interior northern United States, now spreading eastward. It grows from 1 to 3 feet high, and has once- or twice-pinnatifid leaves, with numerous small greenish heads crowded in their axils. — Oil of wormwood, a volatile oil distilled from the common wormwood, usually of a dark green color, containing the property of the herb. — Roman wormwood. (< Artemisia Pontica, an Old World species, more aromatic and less bitter than the common wormwood, preferred in Roman medicine but now scarcely used. (b) by transference of the name, the common ragweed Androsida artemisioides, a bitter plant with foliage dissected somewhat like that of an artemisia. — Salt of wormwood. See salt. — Sea wormwood, the European Artemisia maritima. — Silver wormwood, Artemisia arbuscula, a silvery silky shrub of Madeira. — Tartarian wormwood. Same as santonica, 1. — Tree-wormwood, Artemisia arbuscula, an erect tree-like species found on rocky shores and islands of the Mediterranean. — Wormwood of the West Indies. See Parthenium. — Wormwood wine, wine which has received a bitter taste from having artemisia steeped in it. Compare vermouth.

wormwood-moth (wɜrm'wud-mōth), n. A rare British noctuid, Ctenulia absinthii. It is gray with black spots, and its larva feeds on wormwood. It is found chiefly in Devonshire and Cornwall.

wormwood-pug (wɜrm'wud-pug), n. A British geometrid moth, Eupithecia absinthiata, whose larva feeds upon wormwood.

wormy (wɜrm'i), a. [< worm + -y]. 1. Containing a worm; full of worms; infested or affected with worms; lousy, as fish; measly, as pork; worm-eaten, as timber, fruit, etc.

Damned spirits all . . .

Already to their wormy beds are gone.

Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 384.

2. Worm-like; low; mean; debased; groveling; earthy.

Sordid and wormy affections.

Bp. Reynolds, The Passions, xxxvii. (Latham.)

3. Associated with earthworms, and hence with the earth or the grave; gloomy or dismal as the grave. [Rare.]

A weary wormy darkness.

Mrs. Browning.

worn (wɔrn), p. a. [pp. of wear], v. 1. Impaired or otherwise affected by wear or use.

As she trode along the foot-worn passages, and opened one crazy door after another, and ascended the creaking stair-case, she gazed wistfully and fearfully around.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

2. Spent; passed.

This is but a day, and 'tis well worn too now.

B. Jonson, Epitaph, iv. 2.

3. Wearied; exhausted; showing signs of care, illness, fatigue, etc.

Thy worn form pursues me night and day,

Smiling reproach.

Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, i. 1.

The old worn world of hurry and heat.

Lowell, Invitation.

Lead the worn war-horse by the plumed bier —

Even his horse, now he is dead, is dear.

T. B. Aldrich, Lander.

wornal, wornil (wɔrn'al, -nil), n. Same as wornal. See warble, 3.

worn-out (wɔrn'out), a. 1. So much injured by wear as to be unfit for use; as, a worn-out coat or hat. — 2. Wearied; exhausted, as with toil.

The worn-out clerk

Brow-beats his desk below.

Tennyson, Sonnet to J. M. K.

3. Past; gone; removed; departed.

This pattern of the worn-out age.

Shak., Lucrece, l. 1350.

Pehor also, and Bael-pehor, and the rest, whose Rites are now rotten, and the memorie worne out

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 97.

worry

worowet, v. A Middle English form of worry. worpet, worparet. Old spellings of warper.

worret (wur'et), v. See worrit.

worricow (wur'i-kou), n. [< worry, v., + -er]. One who worries or harasses (himself or others); one who is given to worrying or who harasses with anxious forebodings.

1. A hobgoblin; the devil.

Worricous and gyre-carlins that haunted about the auld wa's at e'en.

Scott, Antiquary, xxi.

2. Any frightful object; an ugly, awkward-looking person; a fright; a bugbear; a scarecrow.

What a worricow the man doth look!

Naylor, Reynard the Fox, 39. (Davies)

[Scotch in both uses.]

worrier (wur'i-er), n. [< worry, v., + -er]. One who worries or harasses (himself or others); one who is given to worrying or who harasses with anxious forebodings.

And captive-like be manacled and bound.
Marlowe, tr. of Ovid's Elegies, ii.

2. In medical jurisprudence, any lesion of the body resulting from external violence, whether accompanied or not by rupture of the skin or mucous membrane—thus differing from the meaning of the word when used in surgery. Great difference of opinion, however, appears in the way in which the word is interpreted when occurring in criminal statutes. Some authorities have held that it necessarily implies the use of a hard or solid instrument other than the hand or fist; others, that it necessarily implies the breaking of the skin beyond the cuticle or outer membrane.

3. A breach or hurt of the bark and wood of a tree, or of the bark and substance of other plants.—4. Figuratively, injury; hurt; harm: as, a wound given to credit or reputation, feelings, etc.: often specifically applied in literature to the pangs of love.

wreck<sup>1</sup> (rek), n. [< ME. wrak, wreck, wrac, < AS. wræc, expulsion, banishment, exile, misery (= D. wrak, wreck, = Icel. rek (for rek), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore, = Sw. vrak, refuse, trash, wreck, = Dan. vræg, wreck), < wrecan = Icel. reka, etc., drive: see wreak<sup>1</sup>, and cf. wreck<sup>1</sup>, a doublet of wreck<sup>1</sup>.] 1. The destruction, disorganization, disruption, or ruin of anything by force and violence; dilapidation: as, the wreck of a bridge; the wreck of one's fortunes.

Hence grew the general wreck and massacre.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 135.

The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds.
Addison, Cato, v. 1.

2. That which is in a state of wreck or ruin, or remains from the operation of any destroying agency: as, the building is a mere wreck; he is but the wreck of his former self.

But still the brave old soul held on, making the most of the wreck of life, now drifting alone to the Islands of the Blessed.
Theodore Parker, Historic Americans, vi.

Naught remains the saddening tale to tell,
Save home's last wrecks—the cellar and the well!
O. W. Holmes, Island Ruin.

3. The partial or total destruction of a vessel at sea or in any navigable water, by any accident of navigation or by the force of the elements; shipwreck.

Go, go, begone, to save your ship from wreck,
Which cannot perish, having thee on board.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 156.

4. A vessel ruined by wreck; the bulk and spars, more or less dismembered and shattered, of a vessel cast away or completely disabled by breaching, staving, or otherwise breaking.

In the statute of Westminster the first (8 Edw. I., c. 4), the time of limitation of claims given by the charter of Henry II. is extended to a year and a day, . . . and it enacts that, if a man, a dog, or a cat escape alive, the vessel shall not be adjudged a wreck. Blackstone, Com., i. viii.

5. That which is cast ashore by the sea; shipwrecked property, whether a part of the ship or of the cargo; wreckage; in old Eng. common law, derelict of the sea cast upon land within the body of a country, and not in the possession of the owner or his agents. Wreck, or more fully wreck of the sea, was at common law applied only to wrecked property cast by the sea upon the land; and this included things grounded—that is, not floating at the time of seizure, although in a position where the tide would float them again. All such property was originally the perquisite of the crown, or of its tenant the lord of the manor; but in course of time an exception was made of wrecks from which any living thing escaped to land, in which case a presumption that an owner would appear arose and the property was preserved for a year and a day, after which if no claim was established the right of the crown was recognized. Wrecked matter floating was within the jurisdiction not of the common-law courts, but of admiralty, and known as derelict, or derelict of the sea. This too was a perquisite of the crown, claimed under the name of droit of admiralty. Such matter was classed as flotsam, jetsam, and lagan or ligan (which see). In the United States the right to derelict for which the owner does not appear is in the Federal government; the right to wreck for which he does not appear is in the State to whose coast it comes, subject usually in either case to the right of the rescuer of it to a compensation known as salvage.

6. Seaweeds cast ashore by storms; wrack.—Commissioners of wrecks (in Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island), receivers of wrecks (in Great Britain), wreck-masters (in New York and Texas), officers whose duty it is to take charge of wrecked property on the part of the coast for which they are appointed, and preserve it for the owner, or, if unclaimed, for the state.—Wreck commissioner, in Great Britain, one of a tribunal consisting of not more than three, appointed by the lord chancellor, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 and 40 Vict., c. 80), for the purpose of investigating shipping casualties.

wreck<sup>1</sup> (rek), v.; pret. and pp. wrecked, pp. wrecking. [< wreck<sup>1</sup>, n.] I. trans. 1. To cause the wreck of, as a vessel; suffer to be ruined or destroyed in the course of navigation or management: said specifically of the person under whose charge a vessel is at the time of its wreck, and usually implying blame, even in case of misfortune.

Friends, this frail bark of ours, when sorely tried,
May wreck itself without the pilot's guilt,
Without the captain's knowledge.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

2. To cause the downfall or overthrow of; ruin; shatter; destroy; bring into a disabled or ruinous condition by any means: as, to wreck a railroad-train or a bank; to wreck the fortunes of a family.

Weak and env'y'd, if they should conspire
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iii. 17.

The meeting-houses of the Dissenters were everywhere wrecked.

3. To involve in a wreck; imperil or damage by wreck: as, a wrecked sailor; wrecked cargo.

Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd as homeward he did come.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 3. 29.

The spurious tea-men are also the buyers of wrecked tea—that is, of tea which has been part of the salvage of a wrecked vessel.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 151.

Like golden ripples hasting to the land

To wreck their freight of sunshine on the strand.

Lowell, Legend of Brittany, i. 33.

II. intrans. To suffer wreck or ruin. [Rare.]

age of any kind, or a person who commits depredation upon such wreckage. Specifically (a) One who lures a ship to destruction on a dangerous coast by false lights or signals, or otherwise, for the purpose of plunder, or one who makes a business of watching for and plundering wrecked vessels. Such wreckers formerly abounded in many parts of the world, sometimes including whole communities in favorable localities.

Those mad days of the Buccaneers and their nominally more respectable descendants, the Wreckers, are gone. Amer. Jour. Psychol. 11, 322.

(b) One who causes the wreck or ruin of anything; one who lays snares or uses artful or dishonest means to cause physical, financial, or moral wreckage. As, a train-wrecker (on a railroad); a bank wrecker; the wrecker of another's character.

2. A person employed in recovering wrecked or disabled vessels, or cargo and other property from such vessels, on account of the owners, underwriters, or other persons legitimately concerned; also, a vessel employed in this service.

wreck-fish (rek'fish), n. The stone-bass, cernier, cherna, or cherne, Polyprion cernium. See Polyprion, and cut under stone-bass.

wreck-free (rek'frē), a. Exempted from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels. This privilege was granted to the Cinque Ports by a charter of Edward I.

wreckful (rek'fūl), a. [wreck + -ful, (f, *ur*ckful).] Causing wreck; producing or involving destruction or ruin. [Archaic and poetical.]

The southern wind with brackish breath
Dispersed them [the ships] all amongst the wreckful rocks.
Marlowe and Nashe, Tragedy of Dido, i. 2.

O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out Against the wreckful siege of battering days?
Shak., Sonnets, lxx.

A summer mere with sudden wreckful gusts
From a side-gorge.
Tennyson, Harold, iii. 1.

wrecking-car (rek'ing-kär), n. A car provided with means and appliances for clearing wreckage or other obstructions from a railroad-track. Sometimes it is a long platform-car fitted with a small derrick and a house at one end. [U.S.]

wrecking-instrument (rek'ing-in'strō-mēt), n. Same as pocket-relay.

wrecking-pump (rek'ing-pūmp), n. A special steam-pump of great capacity, used in freeing sunken or damaged vessels from water.

wreck-master (rek'mās'tēr), n. 1. A person appointed by law to take charge of goods, etc., cast ashore from a wreck. See under wreck.
2. A person appointed by owners or salvors to take charge of a wrecked ship or cargo.

wreck-wood (rek'wūd), n. Wood or timber from wrecked vessels.

There stood upon it, in these days, a single rude house of uncemented stones, approached by a pier of wreckwood.
R. L. Stevenson, Memoirs of an Islet.

Wredin's test. Absence of a certain gelatinous matter from the middle ear of the fetus, taken as evidence that a child has breathed and therefore had been born alive.

wren (ren), n. [Also dial. wran; < ME. wrenne, wranne, a wren, < AS. wrenna, wrænna, a wren.] A very small migratory and insectivorous singing-bird of Great Britain and other European countries, with a slender bill and extremely short tail, and of dark reddish-brown coloration varied with black, inhabiting shrubbery, and belonging to the family Troglodytidae; hence, any member of this family, and, with a qualifying term, one of various other small birds of different families, as certain warblers, kinglets, etc. See the phrases below. Wren originally specified the bird technically known as Sylvia troglodytes, Troglodytes parvulus, T. vulgaris, T. europæus, Anorthura troglodytes, A. communis, etc., the only member of its genus and family found in Europe. It is only about four inches long, very active and sprightly, with a pleasing song at times, and a characteristic habit of carrying the short tail cocked up. This little bird figures extensively in English folklore, and has a host of local, provincial, or familiar names with wren expressed or implied, as bobbin, cutti, kittu, jenny, sally, scutti, tiddy, tiddle, titty, also our Lady of Heaven's hen, etc. This wren is a northerly type, and one of several species of the restricted genus Troglodytes (or Anorthura), as T. familiaris of Japan, T. nasicornis of Alaska, the well-known winter wren of North America, T. hiemalis, which is so near the English wren as to be by some naturalists regarded as only a variety. (See cut under Troglodytes.) In the United States the part taken by the English wren in Europe, is the house-wren, T. aedon or T. domesticus, which abounds in most parts of North America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, runs into several geographical races, and is represented in Mexico and warmer parts of America by several other varieties or congeneric species. The common house-wren in settled districts attaches itself closely to man, and nests by preference in nooks and crannies of outhouses, though it is more retired and wood-loving in other regions. It trills a hearty and voluble song, and lays numerous (from 6 to 10) pinkishwhite eggs very heavily spotted with brown, in the large mass of rubbish which it carries into its hole for a nest. This wren is migratory, and in many parts of the United States its presence is complementary to that of the winter wren. Certain wrens of North America, of the genus Cistothorus (and its section Telmatochryx), inhabit marshes and low wet shrubbery, and are known as marsh-wrens. (See the generic names, marsh-wren, and tule-wren.) Various others, chiefly of southern regions of the United States, and thence southward, as the great Carolina and Bewick's, are of the genus Thryothorus (which see, with cut). Others are the rock-wrens, cañon-wrens, and cactus-wrens, of the genera Salpinctes, Catherpes, and Camptorhynchus. (See the compound and technical names, with cuts.) All these belong to essentially Neotropical types, which have but few outlying forms in the United States, though richly represented by very numerous species of various genera in the warmer parts of America (as those above named, Thryophilus, Urosila, Heterocichla, Cyphorhinus, and Microcerulus). The wrens above noted are all properly so called (Troglodytidae); with the exceptions named, they are all American. The qualified application of wren to various small birds of both hemispheres, including some of other families than Troglodytidae, is given in the phrases following.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

It affects at first usually only those muscles which are directly concerned in the production of writing movements, but, if the act is persisted in, the neighboring muscles may also share in the disturbance. The affection may manifest itself under one of four forms or a combination of them—namely, paralytic, in which weakness in the fingers or even absolute inability to hold the pen is experienced; spastic, in which the attempt to write excites clonic or tonic contractions of the fingers; tremulous, in which the hand shakes so while writing that the letters formed are indistinguishable; and sensory, in which the effort to write causes severe pain, tingling, or other abnormal sensations in the hand and at times in the forearm also. The symptoms vary greatly in different individuals, usually, however, increasing in severity as long as the attempt to use a pen is persisted in. The use of steel pens and metal penholders is supposed to increase the liability to the affection. And to faire speche lightly ther erys close.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnival), p. 63.

2. To give a twist to; make wry; writhe; wring.

Using their wryed countenances, instead of a vice, to turn the good aspects of all that shall sit near them.

B. Jonson, Case is Altered, ii. 4.

Guests by hundreds — not one caring
If the dear host's neck were wried.

Browning, In a Gondola.

3. Figuratively, to pervert; alter.

They have wrested and wryed his [Christ's] doctrine, and like a rule of lead have applied it to men's manners.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

Ill slant eyes interpret the straight sun,
But in their scope its white is wried to black.

Swinburne, At Eleusis.

[Obsolete or archaic in all uses.]

wry<sup>1</sup> (ri), a. and n. [< wry<sup>1</sup>, v. Cf. awry.] I. a. 1. Abnormally bent or turned to one side; in a state of contortion; twisted; distorted; askew.

With fair black eyes and hair and a wry nose.

B. Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry.

He calls them [the clergy] the Saints with Screw'd Faces and wry Mouths.

Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 232.

2. Crooked; bent; not straight. [Rare.]

Losing himself in many a wry meander.

W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, i. 2.

3. Devious in course or purpose; divaricating; aberrant; misdirected.

He's one I would not have a wry thought darted against, willingly.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

Every wry step by which he imagines himself to have declined from the path of duty affrights him when he reflects on it.

Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. xv.

To make a wry face or mouth, to manifest disgust, displeasure, pain, or the like, by distorting or puckering up the face or mouth.

You seem resolved to do credit to our mystery, and die like a man, without making wry mouths.

Scott, Quentin Durward, xxxiv.

II. n. A twisting about, or out of shape or course; distortion; a distorting effect. [Rare or prov. Eng.]

He [the loach] looks so innocent, you make full sure to prog him well, in spite of the wry of the water.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

wry<sup>2</sup>, v. t. [*< ME. wryen, wrien, wreon, < AS. wrcōn, *wrihan, ONorth. wria* (pp. wriġen), cover, clothe. Cf. rig<sup>2</sup>.] To cover; clothe; cover up; cloak; hide.

Wry [var. wre] the gleed, and hotter is the fyr.

zanoraphica (zā-nôr'fī-kä), n. A musical instrument, resembling the harmonichord and the tetrachordon, invented by Röllig in 1801, the strings of which were sounded by means of little bows.

Xantharpyia (zan-thär-pī-ä), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray), < Gr. Xanthos, yellow, + NL. Harpyia, q. v.] A genus of Pteropodidae. X. amplexicaudata is a fruit-bat of the Austromalayan sub-region.

xantharsenite (zan-thär'se-nit), n. [Gr. ξανθος, yellow, + E. arsenic.] A hydrated arsenate of manganese, occurring in sulphur-yellow massive forms. It is found in Sweden, and is related to chondrarsenite.

xanthate (zan'thāt), n. [< xanth(ie) + -ate<sup>1</sup>.]
A salt of xanthic acid.

Xanthine (zan'thē-in), n. [Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -e-in<sup>2</sup>.] That part of the yellow coloring matter in flowers which is soluble in water, as distinguished from xanthin, which is the insoluble part.

xanthelasma (zan-thē-las'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. xanthos, yellow, + ē'asma, a plate.] Same as xanthoma.

Xanthia (zan'thi-ä), n. [NL. (Ochsenheimer, 1816), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow.] A genus of moths, of the family Orthosiidae, having slender porrect palpi, and mostly yellow or orange fore wings undulating along their exterior border. It comprises about 30 species, and is represented in Europe, Asia, North and South America, and the West Indies. X. fulvago is the sawfly-moth of Europe. Its larva feeds when young on catkins of willow, later on bramble and plan-

Xanthian (zan'thi-an), a. [Gr. Ξάνθος, Xanthus (see def.).] Of or belonging to Xanthus, an ancient town of Lycia in Asia Minor.—Xanthian sculptures, a large collection of sculptures, chiefly sepulchral, from Xanthus and the neighboring region, preserved in the British Museum. The collection includes the reliefs from the so-called Harpy tomb. See Harpy monument, under harpy.

xanthic (zan'thik), a. [G. ξανθός, yellow, + -ic.] Tending toward a yellow color; of or relating to xanthin; yellow, referring to the color of the urine.—Xanthic acid, the general name of the esters or ether-acids of thiosulphocarbonic acid, as ethyl xanthic acid,  $C_2SO_3C_2H_5$ , a heavy, oily liquid with a penetrating smell and a sharp, astringent taste, many of whose salts have a yellow color.—Xanthic calculus, a urinary calculus composed in great part of xanthin.—Xanthic flowers, flowers which have yellow for their type, and are capable of passing into red or white, but never into blue. Those flowers of which blue is the type, and which are capable of passing into red or white, but never into yellow, have been termed cyanic flowers.—Xanthic oxid, xanthin.—Xanthic-oxid calculus. Same as xanthic calculus.

× Gr. xanthos, yellow, + -ine, -ine-2. One of several coloring substances, so named with reference to their color. Especially—(a) That part of the yellow coloring matter of flowers which is insoluble in water. (b) The yellow coloring matter contained in madder. (c) A gaseous product of the decomposition of xanthates. (d) A complex body,  $C_5H_4N_4O_2$ , related to uric acid, occurring normally in small quantity in the blood, urine, and liver, and occasionally in urinary calculi. It is a white dimorphous body, and combines with both acids and bases. —Xanthin calculus. Same as xanthic calculus. See uric acid.

xanthinuria (zan-thi-nū'ri-ä), n. [xanthin + Gr. οὔρον, urine.] The excretion of xanthin in abnormal quantity in the urine. Also xanthuria.

Xanthispa (zan-this'pā), n. [NL. (Baly, 1858), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + NL. Hispa, q. v.] A genus of leaf-beetles, of the family Chrysomelidae, erected for the single species X. cimicoides, from Cayenne.

xanthitanite (zan'thi-tan), n. [Gr. ξανθος, yellow, + (t)itan(ic).] An alteration-product of the sphene (titanite) from Henderson county, North Carolina. In composition it is analogous to the clays, but contains chiefly titanitic acid instead of silica.

xanthite (zan'thīt), n. [Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -ite<sup>2</sup>.] A variety of vesuvianite found in limestone near Amity, New York.

Xanthium (zan'thi-um), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700; earlier by Lobel, 1576), < Gr. ξανθόν, a plant, said to be X. strumarium, and to have been so named because its infusion turned the hair yellow; < zantho, yellow.] A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Helianthoidæ and subtribe Ambrosiææ. It is characterized by unisexual flower-heads, the male with a single row of separate bracts, the female armed with numerous hooked prickles. Twenty-one species have been described, perhaps to be reduced to four; they are mostly of uncertain, perhaps of American, origin, but are now widely naturalized throughout warm regions. They are coarse weedy annuals with alternate leaves which are lobed and closely tomentose, or are coarsely toothed and greenish. The small monocious flower-heads are solitary or clustered in the axils; in the fertile heads the fruit forms a large spiny bur containing the achenes. The species are known as cockle-bur, or as clot-bur; 3 occur in the United States, only 1 of which is a native, X. Canadense, which varies near the coast and the Great Lakes to a dwarf variety, echinatum, known as sea-burdock; of the others, X. spinosum, the spiny clot-bur, thought to be a native of Chili, is armed with slender yellowish triid spines in the axils; and X. strumarium is the common species of Europe. In England it is known as ditch-bur, burweed, louse-bur, and small burdock.

xanthiuria (zan-thi-ŭ'ri-ä), n. Same as xanthinuria.

Xantho (zan'thō), n. [NL. (Leach, 1815), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow.] A genus of brachyurous crustaceans, of the family Canceridæ, with numerous species. Also Xanthus.

xanthocarpous (zan-thō-kär'pus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., having yellow fruit.

Xanthocephalus (zan-thō-sef'ā-lus), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1850), < Γαυρός, yellow, + κεφαλή, head.] A genus of Icteridae, or American blackbirds, having as type the common yellow-headed blackbird of the United States, first described by Bonaparte in 1825 as Icterus icterocephalus, and now known as X. icterocephalus. This large blackbird, of striking aspect, abounds in North America.

from Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin westward, extending north into the British possessions, and south into Mexico. The male is jet-black, with the whole head and neck bright-yellow, except the black lores and a black space about the base of the bill; there is a large white wing-patch, and usually there are a few yellow feathers on the thighs and vent. The length is from 10 to 11 inches, the extent  $16\frac{1}{2}$  to  $17\frac{1}{2}$ . The female is smaller and chiefly brownish. This blackbird nests in marshy places, and lays from three to six eggs of a grayish-green color spotted with reddish brown. Also called Xanthosomus.

Xanthochelus (zan-thō-kē'lus), n. [NL. (Chevrolat, 1873), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + χelys, a claw.] A genus of snout-beetles, of the family Curculionidae and subfamily Cleoninae, having wings and somewhat pruinose elytra. It contains less than a dozen species, distributed from Egypt to Siberia.

Xanthochlorus (zan-thō-klō'rus), n. [NL. (Loew, 1857), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + χλωρός, greenish-yellow.] A genus of dipterous insects, of the family Dolichopodidae, comprising 4 small rust-colored species with yellow wings, of which 3 are European and 1 is North American. Leptopus is a synonym.

Xanthochroa (zan-thok' rō-ā), n. [NL. (Schmidt, 1846), < Gr. ξανθός, with yellow skin, < ξανθός, yellow, + χρόα, χρόα, the skin.] A genus of beetles, of the family Edemeridae, comprising 7 species, of which 3 are European, 1 is South American, and 3 are North American. They are small slender beetles with contiguous middle coxae, unspurred front tibiae, and deeply emarginate eyes.

Xanthochroi (zan-thok'rō-ī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of xanthochrous: see xanthochrous.] In ethnol., one of the five groups into which some Ared resin exudes from X. hastata and other species, known as acardum, or Botany Bay resin. See acardum under acardum, black, and resin. Xanthorrhoea resin. Same as acardum resin (which see), under acardum.

xanthosis (zan-tho'sis), n. [NL. < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -osis.] In pathol., a yellowish discoloration, especially that sometimes seen in cancerous tumors.

Xanthosoma (zan-thō-so'mā), n. [NL. (Schott, 1832), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + σώμα, body.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Araceae, tribe Colocaseoidae, and subtribe Colocaseae. It is characterized by coriaceous sagittate or pedate leaves, by two- or three-lobed ovaries separate below but dilated and united above, forming berries in fruit which are included within the spathe-tube, and by anisotropous ovules with an inferior micropyle, mostly attached to the partitions. There are about 20 species, natives of tropical America. They are herbs with a milky juice, producing a tuberous rootstock or thick elongated caudex. They bear long thick petiolate leaves; the flower-stalks are usually short, often numerous, and produce a spathe with an oblong or ovoid convolute tube which bears a boat-shaped lamina and enlarges in fruit. The spadix is shorter and separated by a constriction from the elongated male section. X. alpinum is known in the West Indies as kala; and X. sagittatum (perhaps the same as the last) as taya; for X. sagittatum, see tannier.

xanthospermous (zan-thō-spēr'mus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., having yellow seeds; yellow-seeded.

Xanthotania (zan-thō-tē'ni-ā), n. [NL. (Westwood, 1857), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + τανία, a band; see tania.] A genus of beautiful butterflies, of the nymphalid subfamily Morphinae, containing only the species X. basaris, from Malacca, where it was discovered by A. R. Wallace.

Xanthoura, n. See Xanthura.

xanthous (zan'thus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -ous.] Yellow; in anthropology and ethnography specifying the yellow or Mongoloid type of mankind.

The second great type, the Mongolian or Xanthous or "yellow." W. H. Flower, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII, 316.

xanthoxyl (zan-thok'sil), n. A plant of the former order Xanthoxylaceae (now the tribe Xanthoxyleae). Lindley.

Xanthoxylaceae (zan-thok-sil'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1835), < Xanthoxylum + -aceae.] A former order of plants, equivalent to the present tribe Xanthoxyleae.

Xanthoxyleae (zan-thok-sil'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Nees and Martius, 1823), < Xanthoxylum + -ae.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Rutaceae. It is characterized by regular flowers with free spreading petals and stamens, usually an annular or pulvinate disk, from two to five carpels each with two ovules, and a straight or arcuate embryo commonly with flat cotyledons. It includes 25 genera, mainly tropical, 14 of which are widely separated monotypic local genera. See Xanthoxylum (the type) and Pentaceras.

xanthoxylol (zan-thok-sil'ō-in), n. [< Xanthoxylum + -in.] A neutral principle extracted from the bark of the prickly-ash, Xanthoxylum Americanum.

Xanthoxylum (zan-thok'si-lum), n. [NL. (Philip Miller, 1759), altered from the Zanthoxylum of Linnaeus, 1753, and of Plukenet, 1696, the name of some West Indian tree; applied to this from the yellow heartwood; < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ξύλον, wood.] A genus of plants, of the order Rutaceae, type of the tribe Xanthoxyleae. It is characterized by alternate pinnate leaves, by polygamous flowers with from three to five imbricate or induplicate petals and three to five stamens, and by a fruit of one to five somewhat globose and commonly two-valved carpels. There are about 110 species, widely distributed through tropical and warm regions; nearly 50 occur in Brazil, many others in the West Indies, Mexico, and Central America, and 5 in the United States. They are trees or shrubs, sometimes armed with straight or recurved prickles. The leaves are commonly odd-pinnate, rarely reduced to one to three leaflets; the leaflets are entire or crenate, oblique, and pellucid-dotted. The flowers are small, usually white or greenish, commonly in crowded axillary and terminal panicles. The fruit is usually aromatic and pungent, with a glandular-dotted pericarp. The bark, especially that of the roots, is powerfully stimulant and tonic, and often used for rheumatism, to excite salivation, and as a cure for toothache; it contains a bitter principle (berberine) and a yellow coloring matter; in the West Indies it is esteemed an antispasmodic. Three species in the United States are small trees, of which X. cilirostrum (X. Caribaeum) is the satinwood of Florida, the West Indies, and the Bermudas, its wood, used in the manufacture of small articles, having at first the odor of true satinwood. X. Fagara (X. Pterota) is the wild lime of Florida and western Texas, extending also through Mexico to Brazil and Peru, and has been also known as Fagara Pterota and F. lentisfolia; in southern Florida it is one of the most common of small trees, often a tall slender shrub; it produces a hard heavy reddish-brown wood, known as savin or ironwood in the West Indies. (See wild lime, under lime.) X. emarginatum (X. sapindoides), known as licia-tree or lignum-rorum in the West Indies, and exported thence under the name of rosewood, also extends to Florida, where it is a shrub with coriaceous shining leaves. The 2 other species of the United States are known as toothache-tree and as prickly-ash (which see); of these X.

Americanum is a shrub found from Massachusetts and Virginia to Minnesota and Kansas, and X. Clava-Herculis is a small tree ranging from Virginia southward, also known as peppercorn. For X. Caribaeum, see prickly yellow-wood, under yellow-wood. The other species of the West Indies are there known in general as yellow-wood and as fustic, several producing a valuable wood; in Jamaica X. coriacea is also known as yellow mustard, and X. spinifer as ram-goat (which see); in Australia X. brachyacanthum is used for cabinet-work; in Cape Colony X. Capense is known as knobwood (which see); 6 other woody species occur in the Hawaiian Islands, all there known as heae. The fruit of many tropical species is used as a condiment and also medicinally, as X. piperitum, the Japanese pepper, and X. schinifolium (X. Mantschuricum), the anise-pepper of China. The Chinese bitter pepper, or star-pepper, X. Daniellii, is now referred to the genus Evoidia. X. nitidum is in China a valued febrifuge, and X. alatum a sudorific and antelmintic; the leaves of the latter are used as food for silkworms, its fruit in India as a condiment, and its seeds as a fish-poison.

1. Branch with male flowers. 2. Branch with female flowers and leaves. 3. Male flower. 4. Female flower. 5. Fruit.

Xanthura (zan-thū'rā), n. [NL. (Selater, 1862, after Xanthoura, Bonaparte, 1850), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + οὐρά, tail.] A genus of beautiful American jays, having the tail more or less yellow; the green jays, as X. lucuosa, of the Rio Grande region and southward. These resplendent birds vie with any of the blue jays in color, and are of very unusual hues for this group. The species named is yellowish-green, bright-yellow, greenish-blue, azure-blue, jet-black, and hoary-white in various parts; it is not crested.

Rio Grande Jay (Xanthura lucuosa).

The length is 11 or 12 inches, the extent 14½ to 16½. It nests in bushes, and lays usually three or four eggs of a greenish-drab color marked with shades of brown. Another and still more richly colored species is the Peruvian jay, X. yncas.

xanthuria (zan-thū'ri-ā), n. Same as xanthinuria.

Xanthyrus (zan'thi-ris), n. [NL. (Felder, 1862), prop. **Xanthothyrus*, < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + θύρις, window.] A genus of bombycid moths, of the family Arctiidae, comprising one or more species from South America.

Xantus gecko. See gecko.

Xantusia (zan-tū'si-ā), n. [NL. (S. F. Baird, 1852), named after L. J. Xantus de Vesey, who collected extensively in California and Mexico.] The typical genus of Xantusiidae.

Xantusiidae (zan-tū-si'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. < Xantusia + -idae.] An American family of eriglossate lacertilians, typified by the genus Xantusia, having the parietal bones distinct and the supratemporal fossae roofed over.

xd. A contraction of ex div. (which see).

zebec (zē'bek), n. [Also sometimes zebec, zebeck, sheker, shebeck; = F. chebec = Sp. jabeque = Pg. churco, xarcco = It. sciabeco, also zambeco; said to be < Turk. sumbeki; cf. Pers. Ar. sumbuk, a small vessel.] A small three-masted vessel, formerly much used by the Algerine corsairs, and now in use to some extent in Mediterranean commerce. It differs from the felucca chiefly in having several square sails as well as lateen sails, while the latter has only lateen sails.

Our fugitive, and eighteen other white slaves, were put on board a zebec, carrying eight six-pounders and sixty men. Sumner, Orations, I, 252.

Xema (zē'mā), n. [NL. (Leach, 1819): a made word.] A genus of Laridae; the fork-tailed gulls. X. sabini is the only species. This gull is 13 or 14 inches long. The adult is snowy-white, with extensive slaty-blue mantle, the outer five primaries black tipped with white, the head hooded in slate-color with a jet-black ring, the feet black, and the bill black tipped with yellow. The forking of the tail is about one inch. This remarkable and beautiful gull inhabits arctic America both coastwise and interiorly, and strays irregularly southward in winter, though it is not often seen in the United States. It has been taken in the Bermudas, in Peru, and in Europe. The nest is made on the ground; the eggs are three in number, measuring 1½ by 1¼ inches, and of a brownish-olive color sparsely splashed with brown. The swallow-tailed gull (see swallow-tailed) has sometimes been wrongly referred to this genus.

Fork-tailed Gull (Xema sabini).

xenacanthine (zen-a-kan'thin), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the Xenacanthini.

II. n. One of the Xenacanthini.

Xenacanthini (zen-a-kan-thi'ni), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἀκανθα, spine, + -ini.] An order of fossil selachians. They had the notochord rarely if ever constricted, neural and hemal arches and spines long and slender, and pectoral fins with long segmented axis. The order includes many extinct fishes which flourished in the seas of the Carboniferous and Permian periods, and which have been referred to the families Pleuracanthidae and Cladodontidae.

Xenaltica (zē-nal'ti-kā), n. [NL. (Baly, 1875), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + NL. Haltica, q. v.] A genus of beetles, of the family Chrysomelidae, having the four anterior tibiae with a small spine and the hind tibiae with a double spine. The two known species are from Old Calabar and Madagascar. The genus is supposed to be synonymous with Myrcina (Chapuis, 1875).

xenarthral (zē-nār'thral), a. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἄρθρον, a joint.] Peculiarly or strangely jointed, as a mammal's vertebrae; having certain accessory articulations of the dorsolumbar vertebrae, as the American edentates: the opposite of nomarthral. Gill, 1884.

xenelasia (zen-ē-lā'si-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἔλασις, the expulsion of strangers, an alien act, < ξένος, a stranger, + ἔλασις, < ἐλαίνω (ēla-), drive.] A Spartan law or alien act which prohibited strangers from residing in Sparta without permission.

Xenarthral Articulation of Twelfth and Thirteenth Dorsal Vertebrae of Great Ant-eater (Myrmecophaga jubata), side view, two thirds natural size. az, prezygapophysis, with az', additional anterior articular facet; pz, postzygapophysis, with pz', additional posterior articular facet; m, metapophysis; cc, facet for articulation of capitulum of rib; tc, the same for tubercle of rib.

Xenia (zē-ni-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + γένιον, a gift, a present.] In classical antiq., a present given to a guest or stranger, or to a foreign ambassador.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

Xenichthys (zē-nīk'thīs), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of fishes, including the Xenichthys of the Pacific Ocean, and the Xenichthys of the Indian Ocean.

form dull purplish-blue, the wings and tail blackish edged with white. The bill is pale, the nostrils are small, the bill having a parine shape, though no nasal bristles.

Xenoderm (zē-nōd'ēr-m), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δέρμα, skin.] A genus of the subfamily Xenodermatidae.

Xenoderma (zē-nōd'ēr-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δέρμα, skin.] The typical genus of Xenodermatidae, with granular scales, simple urosteges, and no frontal nor parietal plates. The genus has also been placed in Xenodermatidae. Also Xenodermas.

Xenodermatidae (zē-nōd'ēr-mā-tī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δέρμα, skin.] A subfamily of Acerchordidae or wart-snakes, represented by the genus Xenoderma. Also Xenodermatidae.

Xenodermine (zē-nōd'ēr-mīn), a. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δέρμα, skin.] Of or pertaining to the Xenodermatidae.

Xenodermus (zē-nōd'ēr-mus), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δέρμα, skin.] Same as Xenoderma.

xenodochium, xenodochium (zē-nōd'ō-kō'um, -ki-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δόχμιον, a receptacle, a hotel.] A place for strangers to lodge in, a hotel, a guest-house, a monastery. In classical antiq., a building for the reception of strangers. — 2. In modern Greek lands, a hotel; an inn; also, a guest-house in a monastery.

xenodochy (zē-nōd'ō-ki), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + δόχμιον, a receptacle, a hotel.] 1. Reception of strangers; hospitality. — 2. Same as xenodochium.

xenogamy (zē-nōg'ā-mī), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., cross-fertilization — that is, the impregnation or fecundation of the ovules of a flower with pollen from another flower of the same species, either on the same or (usually) on a different plant.

xenogenesis (zē-nō-jen'e-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + γένεσις, birth.] The generation of offspring which pass through an entirely different life-cycle from that of the parents, and never exhibit the characters of the latter: a mode of biogenesis supposed by Milne-Edwards to occur, but not proved to have any existence in fact.

The term Heterogenesis, . . . has unfortunately been used in a different sense [than that of the offspring being altogether and permanently unlike the parent], and M. Milne-Edwards has therefore substituted for it Xenogenesis, which means the generation of something foreign.

Huxley, Lay Sermons, p. 353.

xenogenetic (zē-nō-jē-net'ik), a. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + γένεσις, birth.] Of the nature of or pertaining to xenogenesis.

I have dwelt upon the analogy of pathological modification, which is in favour of the xenogenetic origin of microzymes.

Huxley, Lay Sermons (ed. 1871), p. 370.

xenogenic (zē-nō-jen'ik), a. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + γένεσις, birth.] Same as xenogenetic.

xenogeny (zē-nō-jē-nī), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + γένεσις, birth.] Same as xenogenesis.

xenolite (zē-nō-lit), n. A silicate of aluminium, related to fibrolite, found at Petershoff, Finland.

xenomenia (zē-nō-mē-nī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + μῆνῆς, menses.] A loss of blood occurring at the time of the menstrual flow elsewhere than from the uterus, and taking the place of the regular flow; vicarious menstruation. Compare stigmatal.

Xenomi (zē-nō-mī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ὄμος, shoulder.] A suborder of fishes, resembling the Haplomi, but distinguished by peculiarities of the pectoral arch (whence the name). It consists of the family Dallidae alone. See cut under Dallia.

xenomorphie (zē-nō-mōr'fik), a. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + μορφή, form.] In lithol., noting the mineral constituents of a rock when they are bounded by planes not formed as the result of their own molecular structure, but the result of their contact with other minerals also forming constituents of the same rock, which having crystallized first have impressed their form on those adjacent to them: the counterpart of idiomorphie. Also called allotriomorphie.

xenomous (zē-nō-mus), a. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ὄμος, shoulder.] Peculiar in the structure of the pectorals, as the Alaskan blackfish; of or pertaining to the Xenomi.

Xenopeltidae (zē-nō-pel'tī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + πέλτα, a shield.] A family of colubroid Ophidia, represented by the genus Xenopeltis. They have no supraorbital or postorbital bone, have a coronoid bone, premaxillary teeth, and gastrosteges, and have no rudiments of hind limbs.

Xenopeltis (zē-nō-pel'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + πέλτα, a shield.] The typical genus of Xenopeltidae, having the lower jaw produced, the teeth very fine, and no anal spurs. X. unicolor, formerly Tortrix xenopeltis, is a singular snake of nocturnal and carnivorous habits, found in Malaysia and some other regions.

Xenophanean (zē-nōf'ā-nē-ān), a. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + φῆνη, a doctrine.] Pertaining to the doctrines of Xenophanes of Colophon, the founder of the Eleatic school of philosophy. He seems to have been the first of the Greeks to propound a monotheistic doctrine, probably of a pantheistic character; but he did not go to the length of denying the reality of the manifold, as Parmenides and his followers did.

Xenophora (zē-nōf'ō-rā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + φέρω, to bear.] The typical genus of Xenophorida, so called from their carrying foreign objects attached to the shell. Formerly also called Phora (a name too near the prior Phora in entomology). See also cut under carrier-shell.

Xenophora pallidula, side view, reduced.

Xenophora pallidula, lower view, reduced.

Xenophorida (zē-nōf'ō-rī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + φέρω, to bear.] A family of twinioglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Xenophora; formerly called Phorida (a name preoccupied in entomology). They are known as carrier-shells, conchologists, and mineralogists. See cuts under carrier-shell and Xenophora.

xenophoroid (zē-nōf'ō-roid), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the Xenophorida.

II. n. Any member of this family.

xenophthalmia (zē-nōf'thal'mī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + ὀφθαλμία, ophthalmia.] Conjunctivitis excited by the presence of a foreign body.

Xenopicus (zē-nō-pī'kus), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, a stranger, + πικρος, a woodpecker.] An isolated genus of North American woodpeckers, based on the Picus albolarvatus of Cassin, and characterized by the structure of the tongue and hyoid bone, in which is seen an approach to that of Sphyrapicus. The body is black, without spots or stripes; the head is white, with a scarlet nuchal crescent in the male; the wings are blotched with white; the length is about 9 inches, the extent 16. This remarkable woodpecker inhabits the mountains of Califorma, Oregon, and Washington, where it is common in pine woods.

White-headed Woodpecker (Xenopicus albolarvatus).

Xenopodidae (zen-ō-pod'-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenopus (-pod-) + -idae.] A family of African aglossal or tongueless toads, typified by the genus Xenopus: same as Dactylophoridae. They are related to the American Pipa, but have upper teeth and some long tentacular processes on the head.

Xenops (zē-nops), n. [NL. (Illiger, 1811), < Gr. ξενος, strange, + ὤψ, face, appearance.] A genus of Dendroclaphidae, or South American tree-creepers, characterized by the short, compressing the single species X. brendeli, from Illinois, remarkable in that the male antennae are flabellate, a unique structure in the family Buprestidae.

Xenorhynchus (zen-ō-ring'-kus), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1855), < Gr. ξενος, strange, + ῥυγχος, beak.] A genus of storks or Ciconiinae, representing the Indian and Australian type of jabirus. X. australis is the black-necked stork (which see, under stork).

Xenos (zē-nos), n. [NL. (Rossi, 1792), < Gr. ξένος, strange.] A genus of parasitic coleopters, of the family Stylopidae, having four-jointed antennae and four-jointed tarsi. The species are found in middle and southern Europe and in North and South America. They are among the most remarkable of insects, and the genus is historically notable as containing the earliest known strepsipters. Also, and preferably, Xenus.

Xenosauridae (zen-ō-sā'-ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenosaurus + -idae.] A family of American eriglossate lacertilians, related to the Iguanidae, based on the genus Xenosaurus.

Xenosaurus (zen-ō-sā'-rus), n. [NL. (Peters, 1861), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] The typical genus of Xenosauridae, based on X. grandis, a Mexican lizard about 10 inches long.

xenotime (zen-ō-tīm), n. [< Gr. ξενότιμος, favoring strangers, < ξένος, strange, + τιμή, honor.] A native phosphate of yttrium, having a yellowish-brown color, and crystallizing in squares, octahedrons, and prisms. It resembles zircon in form, but is inferior in hardness.

Xenotis (zē-nō'tis), n. [NL. (Jordan, 1877), also Xenotes, < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ὄτις (ō-tis), ear.] A genus of centrarchoid fishes, very near Lepomis, in which it is sometimes merged, but having very short, weak, and flexible gill-rakers, and no palatine teeth. Species are X. megalotis, X. marginatus, and X. bombifrons, of the United States, the first-named known as the long-eared sunfish. This is 6 inches long, highly colored, and abounds in many parts of the United States.

xenurine (zē-nū'-rin), n. and a. [< Xenurus + -ine.] I. n. An armadillo of the genus Xenurus; a kabasson. In these forms of Dasyopodidae the buckler is more zoniferous than in the true dasypodines, and the tail is nearly naked; the feet are also somewhat peculiar in the proportions of the metacarpals and phalanges.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the genus Xenurus. Xenurus (zē-nū'-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + οὐρά, tail.] 1t. In ornith., same as Alecturus. Boie, 1826.—2. In mammal., a genus of armadillos, named by Wagler in 1830; the xenurines or kabassons. There are 2 species, pressed, and upturned bill, and ranging from Mexico to southern Brazil. There are 2 distinct species. X. genibarbatus has the back olivaceous and the belly streaked; in X. rubians the back is rufous and the belly is not streaked. They are very small birds, 4 or 5 inches long, both with a white cheek-stripe.

Xenopetrus (zē-nop'-te-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + πέτρος, wing, fin.] A genus of plectognath fishes, of the family Tetrodontidae, characterized by the infundibuliform nostrils and the peculiarity of the dermal ossifications. They inhabit the Indian archipelago. X. natus is a typical example.

Xenopetrus natus

xenopterygian (zē-nop-te-rij'-i-an), a. and n. I. a. Having the characters of or pertaining to the Xenopterygi.

II. n. A fish of this suborder.

Xenopterygii (zē-nop-te-rij'-i-i), n. pl. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + πτερυξ, wing (fin).] A suborder of teleostcephalous fishes, represented by the family Gobiesocidae, and characterized by the development of a complicated suctorial organ in the pectoral region. The xenopterygians had usually been placed with the lump-fishes and snail-fishes, in consequence of their common possession of a sucking-disk, which, however, is formed differently in the present suborder, being chiefly developed from the skin of the breast, in connection with the ventral fins. They are mostly fishes of oblong or lengthened coniform shape, with scaleless skin and spineless fins, one posterior dorsal fin, more or less nearly opposite the anal, and the sucker either entire or divided. They are small fishes, most common in tropical and warm temperate seas between tide-marks, adherent to rocks. There are 10 genera and 25 or 30 species, as Gobiesoc reticulatus, abundant in tide-pools on the Pacific coast of the United States.

Xenopus (zen-ō-pus), n. [NL. (Wagler, about 1830), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + πούς (pōs) = E. foot.] The typical genus of Xenopodidae. There are several species, all of tropical Africa, as X. laevis. They are called clawed toads.

Xenorhina (zen-ō-rī-nā), n. [NL. (Peters, 1863), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ῥίς (rīs), nose, snout.] A genus of batrachians, peculiar to New Guinea, typical of the family Xenorhynchidae. The species is X. oxycephala.

Xenorhinidae (zen-ō-rin'-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenorhina + -idae.] A family of Papuan batrachians, represented by the genus Xenorhina.

Xenorhipis (zen-ō-rī'-pis), n. [NL. (Le Conte, 1866), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ῥίς, also ῥίψ, wickerwork.] A genus of buprestid beetles,

Zoned Xenurine (Xenurus notatus)

X. unicinctus and X. hispidus, which inhabit tropical America, and burrow with great ease underground.

Xenus (zē-nus), n. [NL.: see Xenos.] 1. In entom., same as Xenos.—2. In ornith., same as Terekia (where see cut). J. J. Kaup, 1829.

Xeocephus (zē-ōs'-ē-fus), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1854), and Xeocephalus (G. R. Gray, 1869), and Xeocephus (R. B. Sharpe, 1879); formation uncertain.] A genus of Muscicapidae, confined to the Philippines. X. rufus of Luzon is 7 inches long, and mostly of a cinnamon color. X. cinnameus of Basilan is similar, with a white belly. X. cyanescens is mostly of a grayish cobalt-blue, 8½ inches long, and found in Palawan.

xerafin (zer'-a-fin), n. [Also xeraphine, xeraphen, xeraphin, also, as Pg., xerafin; < Pg. xerafin, xerafin, < Ar. ashrafī (cf. sharāfī, noble), applied prop. to the gold dinar, but also to the gold mohur; < sharīf, noble; see sherif.] An Indo-Portuguese silver coin formerly current in Goa. About 1835 it was worth 75 United States cents.

xeransis (zē-ran'-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρανσις, a drying up, parching, < ξηραίνω, dry up: see xerasia.] In pathol., siccation; a drying up.

Xeranthemum (zē-ran'-thē-mum), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), so called from the scarious involucre; < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + άνθος, flower.] A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Cynaroidae and subtribe Carlinae. It is characterized by long-stalked solitary flower-heads with the outer flowers small, two-lipped, and neutral, the inner ones bisexual and slightly five-cleft, and by free filaments and chaffy aristate pappus. There are 4 or 5 species, natives of the Mediterranean region. They are hoary erect branching annuals, without spines, bearing alternate leaves which are narrow and entire. The scarious inner bracts of the showy flower-heads are rose-colored or whitish; from their permanence, X. annuum, the most frequently cultivated species, is known as annual everlasting or immortelle.

xerantic (zē-ran'-tik), a. [< Gr. ξηραντικός, < ξηραίνω, dry up: see xerasia.] Having drying properties; esiccant.

xerasia (zē-rā'-si-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρασία, a drying, a disease of the hair so called, < ξηραίνω, dry, < ξηρός, dry.] A disease of the hair, characterized by excessive dryness and cessation of growth.

Xerobates (zē-rob'-a-tēz), n. [NL. (Agassiz), < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + βάτης, one that treads, < βαίνειν, go.] A genus of tortoises, so called from inhabiting the dry pine-barrens of the southern United States: now often merged in Testudo. X. or T. carolina is the common gopher. See gopher, 3.

xerocollyrium (zē-rō-ko-lir'-i-um), n. [LL., < Gr. ξηροκόλλιον, a dry or thick eye-salve, < ξηρός, dry, + κόλλιον, eye-salve: see collyrium.] A dry collyrium or eye-salve.

xeroderma (zē-rō-dēr-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + δέρμα, skin.] A mild form of ichthyosis, in which the skin is dry and harsh in consequence of diminished activity of the sudorific and sebaceous glands. Also called dermatoxerasia and dryskin.—Xeroderma pigmentosum, a disease of the skin, beginning usually in childhood, characterized by areas of capillary dilatation and pigment deposit, followed by localized atrophy of the skin alternating with small patches of hypertrophied epithelium.

xerodermia (zē-rō-dēr'-mi-ā), n. [NL.] Same as xeroderma.

xerodes (zē-rō-dēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρόδης, dryish, dry-looking, < ξηρός, dry, + εἶδος, form.] Any tumor attended with dryness.

xeroma (zē-rō-mā), n. [< Gr. ξηρός, dry, + -oma.] Same as xerophthalmia.

xeromyrum (zē-rom'-i-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρόμυρον, a dry perfume, < ξηρός, dry, + μύρον, perfume, ointment.] A dry ointment.

xerophagy (zē-rof'-a-ji), n. [< LL. xerophagia, < Gr. ξηροφαγία, the eating of dry food, abstinence, < ξηρός, dry, + φαγίω, eat.] The habit of living on dry food, especially a form of abstinence, as in the early church, in which only bread, herbs, salt, and water were consumed.

xerophil (zē-rō-fil), n. [< Gr. ξηρός, dry, + φιλεῖν, love.] In bot., a plant of Alphonse de Candolle's second "physiological group" in his natural system of geographical distribution. The plants of this group, like those of the first group, the megatherms, require a hot climate, but, unlike the latter, are adapted to one of great dryness only. They are chiefly found between latitudes 20° and 35° south and north of the equator, and embrace among the most characteristic families the Zugophyllaceae, Cactaceae, Artocarpaceae, Proteaceae, and Cycadaceae. Compare megatherm, mesotherm, and hekistotherm.

xerophilous (zē-rof'-i-lus), a. [NL., < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + φιλεῖν, love.] Loving dryness: in botany noting plants which are in various ways peculiarly adapted to dry, especially to hot and dry climates, as by possessing coriaceous leaves, succulent stems, etc.; specifically, belonging to the group of xerophils. See xerophil.

xerophthalmia (zē-rō-thal'-mi-ā), n. [NL., < LL. xerophthalmia, < Gr. ξηροφθαλμία, dryness of the eyes, < ξηρός, dry, + ὄφθαλμός, eye.] A dry form of conjunctivitis, resulting in a thickening and skin-like condition of the conjunctiva. Also xeroma, and xerosis of the conjunctiva.

Xerophyllum (zē-rō-fil'-um), n. [NL. (Richard, 1803), so called from the harsh dry leaves; < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + φύλλον, leaf.] 1. A genus of liliaceous plants, of the tribe Narthecieae. It is characterized by crowded linear radical leaves, flowers with three styles, and a loculicidal capsule. The 3 species are natives of the United States, and are known as turkeybeard. They are perennials, with a short thick woody rhizome, tall erect unbranched stem, and a great number of harsh rigid elongated leaves, usually forming a conspicuous basal tuft, and also numerous along the stem, but much smaller and thinner, finally diminished into bristles. The flowers are white and very showy, forming a long terminal raceme which is at first densely pyramidal or oblong and becomes afterward greatly elongated. X. setifolium, the eastern species, is a native of pine-barrens from New Jersey to Georgia; the western, X. Douglasii, with a smaller raceme, occurs from the Columbia river to Montana; the raceme of X. tenax, of California, is fragrant and dense, becoming over a foot in length.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

xerosis (zē-rō'-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρωσις, a drying up, < ξηρός, dry: see xerasia.] Same as xeransis.—Xerosis of the conjunctiva. Same as xerophthalmia.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xerostomia (zē-rōs'tō-mē), n. [NL. (Gr. xēros, dry, + stoma, mouth.)] A genus of insects, of the family Xerostomidae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xiphicera (zī-fis'ē-rā), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1801, Gr. xiphos, sword, + cer, horn.)] A genus of orthopterous insects, of the family Xiphiceridae, found in the tropics. The species are small, with long, slender bodies, and long, thin antennae. They are found in the tropics, and are common in the forests of Central and South America.

Xiphiceridae (zī-fis'ē-rā), n. pl. [NL. (S. H. Scudder, as Xiphiceridae), Gr. xiphos, sword, + cer, horn.) A family of short-horned grasshoppers, founded on the genus Xiphicera, and containing some half-dozen genera of large tropical and sub-tropical forms.

Xiphidion (zī-fid'ī-on), n. [NL. (Serville, 1831), also Xiphidion (Agassiz, 1846), erroneously Xiphidion (Fischer, 1854); Gr. xiphos, sword.] 1. In entom., a genus of orthopterous insects, of the family Locustidae, synonymous in part with Orchelimum. They are slender long-horned grasshoppers which lay their eggs in the pith of plants, thus sometimes damaging cereals, especially maize.

2. In ichth., a genus of blennioid fishes: so called by Girard in 1859. Being preoccupied in entomology, the name has been changed to Xiphister (which see).

Xiphidiontidae (zī-fid'ī-on'tī-dō), n. pl. [NL., irreg. Gr. Xiphidion + -idae.] A family of fishes, the gunnels or gunnel-fishes: same as Muraenidae. See rock-eel.

Xiphidiopterus (zī-fid'ī-op'te-rus), n. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1853), Gr. xiphos, sword, + pteron, wing.] A genus of spur-winged plovers, of which the West African X. albiceps is the type. It is a remarkable bird, being the only one of these plovers presenting the combination of wattles and spurs and only three toes (see spur-winged); in consequence, it has been placed in five different genera.

Xiphidion (zī-fid'ī-on), n. [NL. (Serville, 1831), also Xiphidion (Agassiz, 1846), erroneously Xiphidion (Fischer, 1854); Gr. xiphos, sword.] 1. In entom., a genus of orthopterous insects, of the family Locustidae, synonymous in part with Orchelimum. In entom., a genus of orthopterous insects, of the family Locustidae, synonymous in part with Orchelimum. They are slender long-horned grasshoppers which lay their eggs in the pith of plants, thus sometimes damaging cereals, especially maize.

xiphiplastral (zī-fī-plas'tral), a. [Gr. xiphos, sword, + plastron, a sword, + -al.] Of the nature of, or pertaining to, the chelonian xiphiplastron. Also used substantively.

xiphiplastron (zī-fī-plas'tron), n. [Gr. xiphos, sword, + plastron.] The fourth lateral piece of the plastron of a turtle; one of the pair of terminal pieces of the plastron in Chelonia, called xiphiosternum by some. See cuts under plastron and Chelonia.

Xiphister (zī-fis'tēr), n. [NL. (Jordan, 1879). Gr. xiphos, sword, + -ister.] A genus of blennioid fishes, the type of which is the species called Xiphidion mucosum by Girard. This is found along the coast from Monterey to Alaska, reaching the length of 18 inches, and is abundant about tide-rocks, where it feeds on seaweeds. X. rufus is a smaller but similar fish, found with the preceding; and a third member of the genus, of the same habitat and still smaller, is X. clausus.

Xiphisterinae (zī-fis'tēr'ī-nē), n. pl. [NL., Gr. Xiphister + -inae.] In Jordan and Gilbert's classification, a subfamily of Blenniidae, typified by the genus Xiphister.

xiphisternal (zī-fī-stēr'nal), a. [Gr. xiphos, sword, + -sternal.] 1. In anat., of the nature of the xiphisternum, or last sternebra of the sternum; pertaining to the xiphisternum; ensiform or xiphoid, as a cartilage or bone of the breast-bone.

Dissect out the xiphisternal cartilage of a recently-killed frog, and remove its membranous investment (perichondrium). Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 128.

2. In Chelonia, xiphiplastral. See cuts under Chelonia and plastron.

xiphisternum (zī-fī-stēr'nūm), n. [Gr. xiphos, sword, + sternon, breast-bone.] 1. The hindmost segment or division of the sternum, corresponding to the xiphoid appendage or ensiform cartilage of man. It is of various shapes in different animals, sometimes forked or double, there being a right and a left xiphisternum, as in some lizards. It succeeds the segment or segments called the mesosternum and sternum.

2. The xiphiplastron of a turtle. See second cut under Chelonia.

Xiphisura (zī-fī-sū'rā), n. pl. [NL. (orig. erroneously Xyphosura (Latreille), later Xyphisura, Xiphisura, Xiphosura (which see), and prop. Xiphura, noting the dagger-like telson of the king-crab; Gr. xiphos, sword, + -sura, tail.) In Latreille's classification, the first family of his Pacillopoda, contrasted with his Xiphonostoma, and containing only the genus Limulus. Compare Synziphosura. See cuts under horseshoe-crab and Limulus.

Xiphisura (zī-fī-sū'rā), n. pl. See Xiphisura.

Xiphisus (zī-fī'us), n. In mammal. See Ziphius.

Xiphocera, Xiphoceridae. See Xiphicera, Xiphiceridae.

Xiphocolaptes (zī-fī-kō-lap'tēs), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1840), Gr. xiphos, sword, + kolaptes, taken for kolaptes, a chisel: see Dendrocolaptes.] A genus of Dendrocolaptidae, including some of the largest piculines, having the bill much compressed and moderately long (not half as long again as the tarsus). It includes about a dozen species of tropical America, averaging a foot long, which is large for this family, as X. albicollis, etc.

xiphodidymus (zī-fī-dīd'ī-mus), n. [Gr. xiphos, sword, + didymos, twin.] Same as xiphopagus.

Xiphodon (zī-fī-dōn), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1822), Gr. xiphos, sword, + odon (odont) = E. tooth.] A genus of fossil artiodactyl mammals, of Eocene age and small size, now referred to the Dicobanidae.

Xiphodontidae (zī-fī-dōn'tī-dō), n. pl. [NL., Gr. Xiphodon + -idae.] A family of anoplotherioid mammals, at one time recognized as composed of the 3 genera Xiphodon, Canotherium, and Microtherium.

Xiphodontus (zī-fī-dōn'tus), n. [NL. (Westwood, 1838), Gr. xiphos, sword, + odon (odont) = E. tooth.] A genus of coleopterous insects, of the family Lucanidae, having but one species, X. antelope, from South Africa, remarkable for its long sword-like mandibles.

xiphoid (zī-fī'oid), a. and n. [Gr. xiphos, sword, + -oid, form.] 1. a. Shaped like or resembling a sword; ensiform. Xiphoid appendage, appendix, or cartilage, the xiphisternum. See cartilage, and cuts under mesosternum and sternum. Also called xiphoid process. — Xiphoid bone, in ornith., the occipital style of the coracoid and some related birds; a long sharp dagger-like or ensiform ossification in the nuchal ligament, attached to the occiput by its base, and pointing backward.

White-crowned Lappingbird, Xiphidopetris alba.

Yarrell designated the "occipital style" of Shufeldt as the xiphoid bone. Science, III, 404.

Xiphoid ligament, a small ligament connecting the ensiform cartilage or xiphisternum with the cartilage of the seventh rib on either side. Xiphoid process. (a) In anat., the ensiform appendage of the sternum; the xiphisternum. See cuts under mesosternum and sternum. (b) The telson of a crustacean, as the king-crab. See cut under horseshoe-crab.

II. n. The ensiform or xiphoid cartilage in man, or its representative in other animals. See xiphisternum, 1.

xiphoides (zi-foi'déz), n. [NL.] In anat., same as xiphoid.

xiphoidian (zi-foi'di-an), a. [< xiphoid + -ian.] In anat., same as xiphoid.

xiphopagus (zi-fop'a-gus), n.; pl. xiphopagi (-ji). [NL., < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + πάγος, that which is fixed or firmly set.] In teratol., a double monster connected by a band extending from the ensiform cartilage to the umbilicus. The Siamese twins constituted a xiphopagus. Also xiphodidymus.

Xiphophorus (zi-fop'ō-rus), n. [NL. (Haeckel, 1848). < Gr. ξιφοφόρος, also ξιφοφόρος, bearing a sword, < ξίφος, sword, + φέρω = E. bear.] In ichth., a genus of cyprinoids, having in the male the lower rays of the caudal fin prolonged into a sword-shaped appendage, sometimes as long as all the rest of the fish. The anal fin of the male is also modified into an intromittent organ, having one or two enlarged rays with hook-like processes. A curious fish of this genus is X. helleri of Mexico.

xiphophyllous (zi-fō-fil'us), a. [< Gr. ξίφος, sword, + φύλλον, leaf.] In bot., having ensiform leaves.

Xiphorhamphus (zif-ō-ram'fus), n. [NL. (Blyth, 1843). < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + ῥάμφος, beak.] 1. A genus of timeline birds of the eastern Himalayas. X. superciliosus, the only species, is 7½ inches long. The general color above is olivaceous-brown; over the eye is a white streak, but most of the plumage is of sober shades of ashy and rufous. See Xiphorhynchus, 2.

2. A genus of fishes. Muller and Troschel, 1844.

Xiphorhynchus (zif-ō-ring'kus), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1827, also Xiphorhynchus, 1837). < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + ῥύγχος, snout.] 1. A genus of South American dendrocolapine birds, named from the long, thin, and much-curved bill; the saberbills, as X. procurvus. This tree-creeper is 10 inches long, and mainly of a fulvous color, the head blackish with pale shaft-spots. The genus ranges from Costa Rica to southern Brazil and Bolivia, and contains 4 other species—X. trochilostrius, X. latirostris, X. pusillus, and X. pucherani. In the last-named the bill is shorter and less curved, and there is no such white spot under the eye as all the rest have. See cut under saber-bill.

2. A different genus of birds, named by Blyth in 1842 in the form Xiphirhynchus, and changed by him in 1843 to Xiphorhamphus.—3. A genus of Dryophidæ, or wood-snakes: so called from the acute appendage of the snout. X. lamaha is the lamaha of Madagascar. (See cut under lamaha.) This genus was named by Wiegler in 1830, but the name is pre-occupied in ornithology.

4. A genus of fishes. Agassiz, 1829.

Xiphosoma (zif-ō-sō'mā), n. [NL. (Spix), < Gr. ξίφος, a sword, + σώμα, body.] A genus of large serpents, of the family Boidæ, or boas. X. caninum is the dog-headed boa of South America.

xiphosternum (zif-ō-stēr'num), n. Same as xiphisternum. [Rare.]

Xiphosura (zif-ō-sū'ra), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + οὐρα, tail.] Same as Xiphisura: in this form, in Lankester's classification, brought under Arachnida as one of three orders (the other two being Euryptera and Trilobita) brigaded under the name Delobranchia.

xiphosuran (zif-ō-sū'ran), a. and n. [< Xiphosura + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Xiphosura, as a horseshoe-crab.

II. n. A member of the group Xiphosura; a xiphosure.

xiphosure (zif'ō-sūr), n. One of the Xiphosura, as a horseshoe-crab.

xiphosurous (zif-ō-sū'rus), a. [< Xiphosura + -ous.] Same as xiphosuran.

Xiphoteuthis (zif-ō-tū'this), n. [NL., < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + τεῦχις, squid.] A genus of belemnites, characterized by a very long, narrow, deeply chambered phragmacone. Only a single species is known, from the Lias. See Belemnitidae.

Xiphotrygon (zif-ō-tri'gon), n. [NL. (Cope, 1879). < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + τρυγών, a sting-ray.] In ichth., a genus of elasmobranchiate fishes, of the family Trygonidae.

Xiphura (zi-fū'ra), n. pl. The more proper form of Xiphisura.

xiphurous (zi-fū'rus), a. [< Gr. ξίφος, sword, + οὐρα, tail.] Having a long sharp telson like a dagger, as the king-crab; or of pertaining to the Xiphosura or Xiphura; xiphosuran. See cut under horseshoe-crab.

Xiphysidia (zi-fid'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1802). < Gr. ξιφιδία, a kind of shell-fish, < ξίφος, sword.] In entom., a notable genus of hymenopterous insects, of the family Uroceridae, or typical of a family Xiphysidiæ, having the ovipositor considerably exerted, the neck elongate, and certain peculiar venational characters. Ten North American and three European species are known. X. camelus and X. dromedarius are British species, known as camel-wasps from their long neck. The white-horned camel-wasp is X. albicornis. They are found commonly in willows and hedges. Also Xiphysidia, Xiphysidia.

White horned Camel-wasp, Xiphysidia albicornis, female, twice natural size.

Xiphysidiæ (zif-i-dri'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., also Xiphysidiadæ (Leach, 1819), Xiphysidiæ, Xiphysidiites, etc.; < Xiphysidia + -idæ.] A family of hymenopterous insects, named from the genus Xiphysidia, now merged in Uroceridae.

Xirichthys (zi-rik'this), n. Same as Xyrichthys. De Kay, 1842.

X-leg (eks'leg), n. Knock-knee. [Rare.]

xoanon (zō'a-non), n.; pl. xoana (-nä). [< Gr. ξάβων, a carved image, < ξέειν, scrape, carve, especially in wood.] In anc. Gr. art., a work of sculpture of the most ancient and primitive class, rudely formed in wood, the eyes being generally represented closed, and the limbs, when indicated at all, extended stiffly. The examples of these statues, representing deities, which were preserved in Greek historic times, were looked upon with much veneration as divine gifts fallen from heaven; they were usually cloaked with precious stuffs and rich embroideries. No specimen survives, but representations of these old works are found on painted vases. The term is sometimes applied attributively to primitive statues in stone advanced but little beyond the wooden prototypes, as the xoanon statue discovered by the French in Delos. See cut under palladium.

Xolmis (zōl'mis), n. [NL. (Boie, 1828); also Xolmus (Swainson).] A genus of South American tyrant-flycatchers: a synonym both of Taenioptera and of Fluvicola.

xonaltite (zō-nal'tit), n. [< Xonalt (see def.) + -ite.] In mineral., a hydrous silicate of calcium, occurring in massive form of a white or bluish-gray color. It is found at Tetela de Xonalt in Mexico.

Xorides (zor'i-déz), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1809).] A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the ichneumonid subfamily Pimplinæ, or giving name to an unused family Xoridæ, having the face narrowed, the cheeks tuberculate behind the eyes, and the tibiae and tarsi long and slender. The species are peculiar to northern regions, 14 having been described from northern Europe, including 1 from Lapland, and 4 from British America.

Xorididæ (zō-rid'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xorides + -idæ.] A family of hymenopterous insects, named by Shuckard in 1840 from the genus Xorides, but now included in Ichneumonidæ. It has not even subfamily rank, its characters being shared by a number of genera of Pimplinæ.

XX, XXX. Symbols or designations noting ale of certain qualities or degrees of strength, derived originally from marks on the brewers' casks. Compare X, 5.

Xya (zi'ä), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1809), < Gr. ξύειν, scrape, smooth, polish.] A genus of mole-cricket, of the orthopterous family Gryllidæ, having filiform ten-jointed antennæ and fossorial front legs. The species are mainly tropical; but one is European and one (X. apicalis) is North American. Also called Tridactylus and Rhipipteryx.

Xyela (zi-ē'lä), n. [NL. (Dalman, 1819), < Gr. ξύειν, a plane or rasp, < ξύειν, scrape.] A genus of saw-flies, of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidæ, giving name to the subfamily Xyelinae, and having the fourth and following joints of the antennæ long, slender, and filiform. The species are small and have a remarkably long ovipositor. One North American and three European species are known. The generic name has recently been ascertained to be a synonym of Pimicola (Brébisson, 1818).

Xyelinae (zi-ē-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Xyela + -inae.] A subfamily of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidæ, founded on the genus Xyela, and having the antennæ nine- to thirteen-jointed, irregular, third joint very long, anterior wings with three marginal and four submarginal cells, and ovipositor long. Also Xyelidae, Xyelides, Xyelites.

xylanthrax (zi-lan'thraks), n. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + άνθραξ, coal.] Woodcoal: in distinction from lithanthrax.

Xyleborus (zi-leb'ō-rus), n. [NL. (Eichoff, 1864), < Gr. ξύληβόρος, eating wood, < ξύλον, wood, + βόρος, devouring.] A notable genus of bark-boring beetles, of the family Scolytidæ, having the antennal funicle five-jointed, the club subglobose and subannulate, the tarsi with the first three joints subequal and simple, and the tibiae with the outer edge curved and finely serrate. About 75 species are known, of which 14 inhabit North America. X. dispar is common to Europe and North America. It is known in the United States and Canada as the pin-borer, shot-borer, and pear-blight beetle. See these words, and cuts under pin-borer and wood-engraver.

xylem (zi'lem), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ξύλον, wood.] In bot., that part of a fibrovascular bundle which contains ducts or tracheids—that is, the woody part, as distinguished from the phloem, or bast part. Compare phloem. See protoxylem, leptoxylem.

xylene (zi'lēn), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -ene.] Any one of the three metameric dimethyl benzenes  $C_6H_4(CH_3)_2$ . They are volatile, inflammable liquids obtained from wood-spirit and from coal-tar. Also xytol, xytote.

Xylesthia (zi-les'thi-ä), n. [NL. (Clemens, 1859), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ισθίειν, eat.] A peculiar genus of North American tineid moths, allied to Oechsenheimeria and Hapsifera of the European fauna. X. pruniviamella, the type, feeds as a larva upon the black-knot of the plum (Sphaeria morbosa), and the larva of X. clemensella feeds upon dead locust-timber.

Xyletinus (zil-e-ti'nus), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1820), irreg. < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + NL. ptinus, q. v.] A genus of coleopterous insects, of the family Ptinidæ, comprising about 30 species, and very widely distributed. The elytra are striate and the antennæ serrate with joints nine to eleven, not elongate. Seven species occur in North America, as X. pubescens.

Xyleutes (zi-lū'tēz), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816), < Gr. ξυλεύς, a wood-cutter, < ξύλον, wood.] A Common Locust-borer (Xyleutes robiniae), female, natural size.

genus of moths, of the family Cossidæ. X. robiniae is the common locust-borer of the United States. See also cut under carpenter-moth.

xylharmonica (zil-här-mon'i-kä), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + E. harmonica.] An enlarged and improved form of the xylostron (which see).

Xylia (zil'i-ä), n. [NL. (Bentham, 1852), so called from the woody pod; < Gr. ξύλον, wood.]

A genus of leguminous trees, of the tribe Eumimosæ. It is characterized by a broadly falcate compressed woody two-valved pod with transverse obovate seeds. The only species, X. dolabriformis (formerly Inga xylocarpa), is a tall tree of tropical Asia, producing a hard wood and bearing bipinnate leaves of only two pinnae, these with four or five pairs of large leaflets and an odd one. The small pale-green flowers are condensed into globose heads which form terminal racemes or axillary clusters. It is known as the ironwood of Pegu, or by its Burmese name, puenquadi (which see).

xylidine (zil'i-din), n. Same as xyloidine.

Xylina (zil'i-nä), n. [NL. (Treitschke, 1826), < Gr. ξύλον, of wood, < ξύλον, wood.] A genus of noctuid moths, giving name to the Xylinidæ, and having the male antennæ simple, the proboscis short, the body robust, and the fore wings rounded at the apex. The larvae usually live on trees, and the pupæ are subterranean. The genus is represented in all parts of the world, and the species number about 50,

Xylopia (zī-lō'pī-ä), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1763), for Xyloperos, so called from the bitter wood; < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + πικρὸν, bitter.] A genus of plants, of the order Annonaceae, type of the tribe Xyloperae. It is characterized by flowers with a corolla receptacle bearing externally numerous stamens with truncate anthers in the center exserted and containing from one to five carpels, each with two to six ovules. There are from 30 to 40 species, natives of the tropics, chiefly in America, but with several in India and Africa. They are trees or shrubs with coriaceous and commonly two-ranked leaves. The flowers are sessile or clustered in the axils, and are nearly or quite sessile, each with six petals, the outer elongated, thin, boat-shaped, curving erect, and almost meeting at the summit, surpassing the three inner petals. The fruit consists of oblong or elongated berries produced on a convex receptacle. X. Ethiopica, of western tropical Africa, is the source of African, negro, or Guinea pepper; it is a tree with pointed ovate leaves, and a fruit consisting of several dry black quill-like aromatic carpels about 2 inches long. These are sold in native markets as a stimulant and condiment, and were formerly imported into Europe, forming the piper. Ethiopicum of old writers. For X. polycarpa, of tropical Africa, see yellow-barked tree (under yellow). From the pervasive flavor of their wood various American species are called bitter-wood, especially X. glabra in the West Indies and X. frutescens in Guiana. The fruit of X. sericea in Brazil serves as a spice, and its bark torn from the tree in ribbon-like strips is twisted into coarse cordage, and would be available for matting. X. frutescens, known in Brazil as embira, has similar uses. Several species have formerly been classed under the genera Umbra, Carica, and Habrota.

Xylopieae (zī-lō-pī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Xylopius + -ae.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Annonaceae. It is characterized by densely crowded stamens, and thick exterior petals which are connivent or scarcely open; the inner ones are included and smaller, and are sometimes minute or absent. It includes 8 genera, chiefly of tropical trees, of which the chief are Annona, Habrota, and Xylopius (the type).

Xylopinus (zī-lō-pī-nus), n. [NL. (Le Conte, 1862), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + πίνω, be hungry.] A genus of tenebrionid beetles, peculiar to North America, having the antennae slender with the distal joints triangular, the anterior tarsi of the male little dilated, and the anterior margin of the front not reflexed. Three species are known. They live under the bark of dead trees.

xylopyrography (zī-lō-pī-rōg'ra-fī), n. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + πυρ, fire, + γραφή, < γράφω, write.] Same as poker-painting.

xyloretine (zī-lō-rē'tin), n. [For xyloretine; < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ρητίνη, resin; see resin.] A subfossil resinous substance, found in connection with the pine-trunks of the peat-marshes of Holtegaard in Denmark.

Xyloryctes (zī-lō-rik'tēz), n. [NL. (Hope, 1837), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ὀρύκτης, a digger.] A peculiar genus of scarabæid beetles, having the head of the male armed with a long horn, and the female head tuberculate. The genus corresponds in the western hemisphere to the eastern Oryctes. X. saturatus is rather common in the eastern United States. Its larva is said to injure the roots of ash-trees.

Xyloryctes saturatus, female, natural size.

xylosistrum (zī-lō-sis'tron), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + σίστρον, sistrum; see sistrum.] A musical instrument, invented by Uthe in 1807, resembling Chladni's euphonium, but having wooden instead of glass rods. Compare xylophone.

xylostein (zī-lōs'tē-in), n. [< NL. Xylosteum (see def.) < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ὀστρεον, bone) + -in<sup>2</sup>.] An active poisonous principle which has been isolated from the seeds of Lonicera Xylosteum, a species of honeysuckle.

Xylostroma (zī-lō-strō'mā), n. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + στρώμα, anything spread or laid out.] A genus or form-genus of polyporoid fungi, which continues indefinitely, without fruiting, as a thick dense leathery sheet covering the wood upon which it lives.

xylostromatoid (zī-lō-strō'ma-toid), a. [< NL. Xylostroma (-t-) + -oid.] In bot., resembling the genus or form-genus Xylostroma—that is, having a tough woody or leathery appearance—as the matted mycelium of certain polyporoid fungi.

Distinguished by its distinct xylostromatoid substratum. M. C. Cooke, Handbook of British Fungi, I. 232.

Xylota (zī-lō'tā), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1822), < Gr. ξύλον, wood.] A large genus of syrphid flies, comprising medium-sized or large species, slender, with the abdomen more or less red, yellow, or metallic. More than 40 species are found in North America, and about 15 in Europe. The larvae are found in decaying wood, and the adults frequent the foliage of bushes in blossom.

Xyloletes (zī-lō'tē-lēz), n. [NL. (Newman, 1840), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + λείω, end.] A genus of Polynesian cerambycid beetles, comprising about a dozen species from New Zealand and the Philippines. They are rather large pubescent beetles, with the intercoxal prominence of the abdomen in the form of an acute triangle.

Xyloterus (zī-lō'tē-rus), n. [NL. (Erichson, 1836), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τερέω, bore.] 1. A genus of bark-boring beetles, containing several very destructive species, as X. bivittatus, which seriously injures the spruce in North America. They have the antennal club large, oval, solid, pubescent on both sides, the eyes completely divided, and the tibiae serrate. Five species occur in the United States. By European authors the genus is considered a synonym of Trypodendron (Stephens, 1830).

2. A genus of horntails, comprising two European species. Hartig, 1837.

xylotile (zī-lō'til), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τίλος, down.] A mineral of fibrous structure and wood-brown color, probably an altered form of asbestos.

xylotomus (zī-lō'tō-mus), a. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -τομος, < τέμνω, ταμείν, cut.] Wood-cutting, as an insect.

Xylotrogi (zī-lō-trō'ji), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τρώγω, gnaw.] In Latreille's classification, a group of serricorn beetles, distinguished among serricornes from Malacodermi and from Sternori.

Xylotrypes (zī-lō-trī'pēz), n. [NL. (Dejean, 1834, as Xylotrypes), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τρυπῶ, bore.] A genus of very large lamellicorn beetles, related to Dynastes, as X. gideon of Malacca, which attacks the cocoanut. The cephalic horn of the males is always forked, and the thoracic horn sometimes bifid. About a dozen species are known, belonging mainly to the Australasian fauna.

Xyrichthys (zī-rik'this), n. [NL. (Cuvier and Valenciennes, 1839), also Xyrichthys, Zyrichthys; < Gr. ξυρ, a razor, + ιχθυς, a fish.] In ichth., a genus of brilliantly colored labroid fishes, of tropical seas, known as razor-fishes. X. vermiculatus is West Indian, and differs little from the European type of the genus. X. lineatus of the West Indies, and occasional on the southern coast of the United States, is roseated with a large blotch on each side below the pectorals.

Xyridaceae (zī-ri-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Xyris (-id-) + -aceae.] Same as Xyridae.

xyridaceous (zī-ri-dā'shius), a. Characterized like Xyris; belonging to the Xyridae (Xyridaceae).

Xyridae (zī-rid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Kunth, 1815), < Xyris (Xyrid-) + -ae.] An order of monocotyledonous plants, of the series Coronarieae. It is characterized by slightly irregular bisexual flowers, sessile and solitary under imbricated bracts in a terminal head. The perianth consists of three equal broad-spreading delicate corolla-lobes, and a single large petaloid caducous sepal which wraps around the corolla, or is in the tropical American genus Abolboda absent. There are perhaps 48 species, belonging mostly to the genus Xyris (the type), the others to Abolboda. They are usually perennial, growing in tufts in wet places, chiefly in warm countries. They resemble the sedges and rushes in habit, the Restioideae in the structure of their seeds, and the spiderworts in that of their ovules.

Xyris (zī'ris), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737; earlier in Lobel, 1581), so called from the sharp-edged leaves; < Gr. ξυρίς, a species of Iris, perhaps I. foetidissima, < ξυρῶν, a razor, < ξέω, scrape.] A genus of plants, type of the order Xyridaceae. It is characterized by flowers with a broad petaloid sepal which is very caducous, and a style without any appendage. About 40 species have been described, but not all are now thought distinct. They are tufted herbs, the stems usually flattish and two-edged, with linear rigid or grass-like leaves, and small globose or ovoid flower-heads with very closely imbricated rigid bracts. They are known as yellow-eyed grass, from the yellow petals; 17 species occur in the southern United States, mostly in sands and pine-barrens; 4 extend northward, of which X. flexuosa, with a twisted, and X. Caroliniana, with a flattish scape, occur from Massachusetts to Florida; X. umbriata and X. torta occur in pine-barrens from New Jersey southward. The leaves and roots of X. Indica are used as a remedy against leprosy and the itch in India, as are also those of X. Americana in Guiana and of X. caginata in Brazil.

xyst (zist), n. [< L. xystus, also xystum, < Gr. ξυστός, a covered portico (so called from its polished floor), < ξυστός, scraped, smoothed, polished, < ξέω, scrape, plane, smooth, polish.] In anc. arch., a covered portico or open court, of great length in proportion to its width, in which athletes performed their exercises; or, in Roman villas, sometimes, a garden walk planted with trees. Also xystos, xystus.

Xysta (zīs'tā), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1824), < Gr. ξυστός; see xyst.] 1. A genus of dipterous insects, belonging to the Muscidae calyptratae and subfamily Phasiinae. They are medium-sized or small somewhat hairy flies of black or gray color, whose metamorphoses are not known. Few species have been described, of which but one is North American.

2. A genus of tenebrionid beetles, synonymous with Elæodes (Eschscholtz, 1829).

xystarch (zīs'tārk), n. [< LL. xystarches, < Gr. ξυστάρχης, the director of a xyst, < ξυστός, a covered portico, xyst, + ἀρχεω, rule.] An Athenian officer who presided over the gymnastic exercises of the xyst.

xyster (zīs'tēr), n. [< Gr. ξυστήρ, a scraping-tool, < ξέω, scrape; see xyst.] 1. A surgeon's instrument for scraping bones.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of fishes. Lacépède.

Xysticus (zīs'ti-kus), n. [NL. (Koch, 1835), < Gr. ξυστικός, of or for scraping, < ξυστός, scraped; see xyst.] A large genus of laterigrade spiders, of the family Thomisidae. About 30 species are described from North America.

xystos (zīs'tos), n. [NL. or L.; see xyst.] Same as xyst.

Xystrocera (zīs-tros'ē-rā), n. [NL. (Serville, 1834), < Gr. ξύστρα, a scraper, + κέρα, horn.] In entom., a genus of tropical longicorn beetles of large size, and usually of a reddish-yellow color variegated with metallic green. About 30 species are known, nearly all from African and Australasian faunas.

Xystroplites (zīs-trop-lī'tēz), n. [NL. (Jordan MSS., Cope, 1877), < Gr. ξύστρα, a scraper (< ξέω, scrape), + ὀπλίτης, armed.] A genus of centrarchoid fishes, distinguished from Lepomis by the blunt pharyngeal teeth. A species is found in Texas, usually called Lepomis heros.

xystus (zīs'tus), n. 1. Same as xyst.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A generic name variously applied to certain hymenopterous, coleopterous, and lepidopterous insects.

1. The twenty-ninth letter in the English alphabet. It is the twenty-ninth letter in the English alphabet. It is a consonant, and is represented by the letter Y. It is a vowel in some words, such as my and by. It is also a diphthong in some words, such as ay and ey. The letter Y is derived from the Greek letter chi ( $\chi$ ), which was used to represent the sound of the letter in Greek. In Latin, the letter Y was used to represent the sound of the letter in Latin words. In English, the letter Y is used to represent the sound of the letter in English words. The letter Y is a very common letter in the English alphabet, and it is used in many words. It is a very important letter, and it is used in many different ways. It is a very versatile letter, and it is used in many different contexts. It is a very useful letter, and it is used in many different ways. -y<sup>1</sup>. [Early mod. E. also -ye; < ME. -y, -ye, -yē, -yē; AS. -ig = D. -ig = OHG. -ig, -ig, -ig; MHG. -ig, -ig; G. -ig = -ig, -ig, -ig; Sw. -ig = -ig, -ig, -ig; cf. L. -us = Gr. -us], an adj. suffix, as in AS. stony, stony, icy, icy, icy, icy, etc. This suffix is often spelled -y, especially when attached to a word ending in -a, as in clayey, shaly. A very common suffix used to form adjectives from nouns, and sometimes from verbs, such adjectives denoting 'having,' 'covered with,' 'full of,' etc., the thing expressed by the noun, as in stony, rocky, icy, watery, rainy, dewy, moaty, juicy, mealy, salty, peppery, powdery, flowery, spotty, speckly, etc. It may be used with almost any noun, but is found chiefly with nouns ending in -a, while examples of its use with trisyllables are rare.

-y<sup>3</sup>. [Early mod. E. also -ye, -ie; < ME. -ie, -ye, < OF. -ie, F. -ie = Sp. -ia, in some words of Gr. origin -ia = Pg. It. -ia, < L. -ia = Gr. -ia, a common term. of fem. abstract (and concrete) nouns, as in L. familia, family, mania (< Gr. mania), madness, etc. See def. Cf. -cy, -ency, -ce, -ence, etc.] A termination of nouns from the Latin or Greek, or of modern formation on the Latin or Greek model. Such nouns are or were originally abstract, but many are now concrete. Examples are family, manicure, homily, theory, geography, philosophy, hydrology, etc. The list is innumerable. Besides words from the Latin and Greek, many other words have the termination -y, either after the analogy of the Latin and Greek termination, or from some other source. As the termination in such cases usually has no significance, and is therefore not used as a formative within the meaning assigned to that word, such words, which are very numerous and intractable to classification, are here ignored.

ya<sup>2</sup> (yā, yā). A dialectal form of you.

yacare (yak'a-re), n. [Braz.] Same as jacare.

yacca (yak'ā), n. [W. Ind.] Either of two West Indian evergreens, Podocarpus pardiannia and P. coriacea, trees becoming respectively 100 feet and 50 feet high, and affording timber suitable for cabinet and plain purposes.

yacca-tree (yak'ā-trē), n. Same as yacca.

yacca-wood (yak'ā-wūd), n. The wood of the yacca tree.

yacht (yā't), n. [Formerly also yatcht, yatch < F. yacht, < E.; = G. yacht, < MD. yacht, D. yacht, a yacht, lit. a chase, hunting (= OHG. yacht, MHG. yacht, G. yacht, chase, hunting), < G. yagen, MHG. yagen, G. yagen, hunt.] A vessel propelled either by sails or by steam, most often light or comparatively small, but sometimes of large size, used for pleasure-trips or for racing, or as a vessel of state to convey persons of distinction by water. There are two distinct types of yacht: the motor yacht with large spars and sails, but with little or no steam power; and the steam yacht, which is a vessel of a more elaborate construction, but steam vessels of every kind are now as common as yachts.

I sailed this morning with his Majesty in one of his yachts (or pleasure-boats), vessels not known among us till the Dutch East India Company presented that curious piece to the king. Feetly, Diary, Oct. 1, 1661.

Yacht, a Dutch Vessel or Pleasure boat about the largeness of our Barge. Blount, Glossographia (1670).

Yacht, a small sort of a Ship, built rather for Swiftness and Pleasure than for Merchandize or Warlike service. E. Phillips, 1706.

yacht (yā't), v. i. [< yacht, n.] To sail or cruise in a yacht.

The young English . . . seek for travels as dangerous as war, diving into Maelstroms, . . . yachting among the icebergs of Lancaster Sound. Emerson, Power.

yacht-built (yā't'bilt), a. Constructed on the model of a yacht.

On the coast of Florida, there are the skimming-dish, the pumpkin-seed, and the flat-iron models, all half-round yacht-built boats, broad and beamy, cat-rigged or sloop-rigged; they all pound and spunk in a sea-way, and are very wet. J. A. Henshall, Forest and Stream, XIII, 683.

yacht-club (yā't'klub), n. A club or union of yacht-owners for racing purposes, the promotion of yachting, etc., usually presided over by a commodore.

yachter (yā't'chēr), n. [< yacht + -er<sup>1</sup>.] One who commands a yacht; also, one who sails in a yacht; a yachtsman.

yachting (yā't'ing), n. [Verbal n. of yacht, v.] The art of navigating a yacht; the sport of sailing or traveling in a yacht. Also used attributively: as, a yachting voyage; a yachting suit.

yachtsman (yā'ts'man), n.; pl. yachtsmen (-men). One who keeps or sails a yacht.

The men . . . were hauling up the mainsail, Claud and Freddy lending superfluous aid, and making themselves very hot over it, as the manner of yachtsmen is. W. E. Norris, Matrimony, v.

yachtsmanship (yā'ts'man-ship), n. [< yachtsman + -ship.] The art or science of sailing or managing a yacht. Also yachtsmanship.

The partisans of English yachtsmanship need not be disconcerted. St. James's Gazette, Sept. 8, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

yaff (yāf), v. i. [Imitative; cf. yap<sup>1</sup> and waff<sup>2</sup>.] To bark like an angry dog; yelp; hence, to talk pertly. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

This said, up came a yaffing cur. A. Scott, The Hare's Complaint. (Jamieson.)

yaffingale (yāf'ing-gāl), n. [Appar. altered from yaffle<sup>1</sup>, with term. conformed to that of nightingale.] Same as yaffle<sup>1</sup>. Also yappingale. [Prov. Eng.]

I am woodman of the woods, And hear the garnet-headed yaffingale Mock them. Tennyson, Last Tournament.

yaffle<sup>1</sup> (yāf'l), n. [Imitative; cf. yaff.] The green woodpecker, Geococcyx viridis; from its loud laughing notes. Also yaffil, yaffler, yaffingale. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

The Green Woodpecker, Geococcyx or Picus viridis, though almost unknown in Scotland or Ireland, is the commonest; frequenting wooded districts, and more often heard than seen, its laughing cry (whence the name "Yaffil" or "Yaffle," by which it is in many parts known) and undulating flight afford equally good means of recognition. Encyc. Brit., XXIV, 651.

yaffle<sup>2</sup> (yāf'l), n. [Also yafful; origin obscure.] 1. An armful. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A pile of codfish to be carried from the flakes to the storehouse. [Local, Massachusetts.]

yaffle<sup>2</sup> (yāf'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. yaffled, ppr. yaffling. [< yaffle<sup>2</sup>, n.] To transport yaffles of fish: as, "now, boys, go to yaffling." [Provincetown, Massachusetts.]

yager (yā'gēr), n. [< G. jäger (= D. jager), a huntsman, < jagen, hunt: see yacht. Cf. jäger.] 1. Formerly, a member of various bodies of light infantry in the armies of different German states, recruited largely from foresters, etc.; now, a member of certain special battalions or corps of infantry or cavalry, generally organized as riflemen.—2. Same as yager.

yagger (yag'ér), n. [< D. jagar, a huntsman, < jagun, hunt; see yacht.] A ranger about the country; a traveling peddler. [Shetland Islands.]

I would take the lad for a yager, but he has rather fewer good havings, and he has no pack. Scott, Pirate, v.

yaguarundi (yag-wa-run'di), n. [Also jaguarundi, yaguarundi; S. Amer.: see jaguar.] A wild cat of Mexico and Central and South America, Felis jaguarundi. This cat is nearly as large as the ocelot, but entirely without spots, in which respect, as well as in its slender form, it resembles the cheetah, and has thus a musteline rather than a feline aspect. The tail is as long as the body exclusive of the head and neck. The general color is a uniform grizzled brownish gray, the individual hairs being annulated and tipped with blackish; kittens are more rufous brown. The yaguarundi ranges northward nearly or quite through Mexico, and of late years has generally been included among the mammals of the United States.

yah (yā), interj. An interjection of disgust.

Yahoo (yā-hō'), n. [A made name, prob. meant to suggest disgust; cf. yah, an interj. of disgust.] 1. A name given by Swift, in "Gulliver's Travels," to a feigned race of brutes having the form of man and all his degrading passions. They are placed in contrast with the Houyhnhnms, or horses endowed with reason, the whole being designed as a satire on the human race.

He [the Houyhnhnm] was extremely curious to know "from what part of the country I came, and how I was taught to imitate a rational creature; because the Yahoos (whom he saw I exactly resembled in my head, hands, and face, that were only visible), with some appearance of cunning, and the strongest disposition to mischief, were observed to be the most unteachable of all brutes."

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iv. 3.

Hence—2. [l. c.] A rough, brutal, uncouth character.

A yahoo of a stable-boy.

Graves, Spiritual Quixote, iv. 10. (Davies.)

"What sort of fellow is he? . . . A Yahoo, I suppose." "Not at all. He is a capital fellow, a perfect gentleman."

H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, iv.

3. [l. c.] A greenhorn; a back-country lout. Bartlett. [Southwestern U. S.]

Yahveh (yā-vā'), n. Same as Jehovah.

Yahvist (yā-vist'), n. Same as Jehorist.

Yahvistic (yā-vis'tik), a. Same as Jehoristic.

yaip, v. i. Same as yamp<sup>2</sup>.

yak (yak), n. [< Tibetan gyak.] The wild ox of Tibet, Poephagus grunniens, or any of its domesticated varieties; the grunting ox. The yak is a remarkable instance of the development of the pelage under climatic influences. The modification is like that seen in the musk-ox of arctic regions, Ovibos moschatus, though altitude has done for the yak what has resulted from latitude in the case of the musk-ox. The body is covered with very long hair hanging from the shoulders, sides, and hips nearly to the ground, and the tail bears a heavy brush of long hairs. The wild animal, which inhabits the mountains of Tibet about the snow-line and descends into the valleys in winter, is of a blackish color; the back is humped; and the general form is not unlike that of the bison, though the long hair gives the animal a different appearance. The actual relationships of the yak are with the humped Asiatic cattle of which the zebu is the best-known domesticated stock. The yak is of great economic importance to the Tibetans, and has been domesticated. In this state it sports in many color-varieties, like other cattle. It is used as a beast of burden, makes excellent beef, and yields rich milk and butter; the long silky hair is spun and woven for many fabrics. The tails when mounted furnish the fly-snappers or chowries much used in India, and they are also dyed in various ranges. The relationships of the yak in are with the rupicaprine and nemorhine antelopes, as the European chamois, the Asiatic goral, and the American Rocky Mountain goat.

yakopu (yak'ō-pō), n. A weapon like the kut-tar, used by the people of Java and Sumatra.

yaksha (yak'shā), n. [Skt.] In Hindu myth., one of a class of demigods who attend Kuvera, the god of riches, and guard his treasures.

Yakut (ya-kōt'), n. A member of a people of Turkish or mixed Turkish origin, dwelling in Siberia in the neighborhood of the Lena.

yald<sup>2</sup>, yauld (yald), a. [*Prob. var. of *yeld, < Icel. gildr = Sw. Dan. gild, stout, brawny, of full size.*] Supple; active; athletic. [Scotch.]

Bein' yald and stout, he wheelit about,
And kluve his heid in twaine.

Heug, Mountain Bard, p. 43. (Jamieson.)

Yale lock. See lock<sup>1</sup>.

yellow (yāl'ō), a. A dialectal variant of yellow. George Eliot, Silas Marner, xi. yam (yam), n. [= F. ignama, < Sp. ignama, igname, ignam, ignam = Pg. inhame (NL. inhame), < African (in Pg. rendering) inhame, yam. The Malay name is ubi, Javanese ubi, E. Ind. oebis (Müller), whence G. öbis-wurzel, yam.] 1. A tuberous root of a plant of the genus Dioscorea, particularly if belonging to one of numerous species cultivated for their esculent roots; also, such a plant itself. The plant is commonly a slender twining high-climbing vine, in some species prickly; the root is fleshy, often very large, sometimes a shapeless mass, sometimes long and cylindraceous, varying in color from white through purple to nearly black. The yam is propagated by cuttings from the root, or also in some species by axillary bulbets. The root contains a large amount of starch, sometimes 25 per cent., is hence highly nutritious, and in tropical lands largely takes the place of the potato of temperate climates. It lacks, however, the dry meanness of the potato, and is on the whole rather coarse, and not as a rule highly esteemed by people of European races. It is cooked by baking or boiling, and is in the West Indies sometimes converted into a meal used for making cakes and puddings. D. sativa is an ordinary species (the hoi of the Hawaiians) with unarmed stem and an acid root which requires soaking before boiling; it is a profitable source of starch. D. alata, the red or white yam, the ubi of the Fiji Islands, has a winged, not prickly stem, supported in culture by reeds; its tubers attain sometimes a length of 3 feet and a weight of 100 pounds. D. aculeata, the karwai of the Fijis, has prickly stems not requiring support. D. Batatas, the Chinese or Japanese yam, is hardy in temperate climates, and excited considerable interest in Europe and America, at the time of the potato-rot, as a possible substitute for that crop. The tuber is pure-white within, of a flaky consistency, and of a taste agreeable to many. It grows 3 feet deep, however, enlarging somewhat toward the bottom, hence is very difficult to gather. D. sativa also is hardy in the southern United States, but the true yam is there little cultivated. (See def. 2.) These species present many varieties, and various other species are more or less cultivated.

The negro yams are a yearly crop, but the white yams will last in the ground for several years.

2. By transference, a variety of the sweet-potato. [Southern U. S.]

De yam will grow, de cotton blow,
We'll hab de rice an' corn.

Whittier, Song of the Negro Boatmen.

3. Any plant of the order Dioscoreaceæ. Lindley.—Chinese yam. See def. 1.—Common or cultivated yam, Dioscorea sativa.—Japanese yam. See def. 1, and cut under Dioscorea.—Kawai yam. See def. 1.—Ooyala yam, Dioscorea tomentosa, of the East Indies.—Port Moniz yam. See Tamus.—Red yam. See def. 1.—Tivoli yam, Dioscorea nummularia, of India and the Malayan and Pacific islands.—Uvi yam. See def. 1.—White yam. See def. 1.—Wild yam, any native species of yam. Specifically—(a) The wild yam-root, Dioscorea villosa, of North America, a delicate and pretty twining vine, extending north to Canada. The root is esteemed by eclectics a cure for bilious colic, and is used by the southern negroes against rheumatism: hence called colic-root and rheumatism-root. (b) See Rajania.—Winged yam, Dioscorea alata.—Yam family, the plant-order Dioscoreaceæ.

Yama (yam'ā), n. [Skt. Yama, prob. lit. 'the twin.'] In early Hindu myth., the first mortal, son of the sun (Vivasvat) and progenitor of the human race, who went first to the other world, and ruled as king of those who followed him thither; later, the god of departed spirits and the appointed judge and punisher of the dead. He is in modern Hindu art generally represented as crowned and seated on a buffalo, which he guides by the horns. He is four-armed, and of austere countenance. In one hand he holds a mace, in another a noose which is used to draw out of the bodies of men the souls which are doomed to appear before his judgment-seat. His garments are of the color of fire; his skin is of a bluish green.

yamadou (yam'a-dō), n. An oil obtained from the tallow-nutmeg, Myristica sebifera. See nutmeg, 2.

yama-mai (yam'ā-mi'), n. [NL. (Guérin-Ménéville, 1861), < Jap. yama-mai, lit. 'worm of the mountains.'] A large bombycid moth, whose larva feeds on the oak Quercus serrata in Japan, and furnishes silk of excellent quality which has long been utilized in the manufacture of the heavier native silk fabrics. The worm has been reared in Europe and in the United States, but has not been commercially successful in those countries. See silkworm, 1.

yam-bean (yam'bēn), n. A leguminous plant, Pachyrhizus tuberosus and P. angulatus, widely cultivated in the tropics for its pods, which are used as a vegetable, and for its tubers, which are edible cooked when young, and furnish in large quantity a starch said to be fully equal to arrowroot. The tubers are borne at intervals along the cord-like roots. P. tuberosus has often been included in P. angulatus, but is for cultural purposes at least distinct, having a much larger pod free from irritating hairs. In the Fiji Islands P. angulatus is called yaka or wa yaka; in English it has been distinguished from P. tuberosus as the short-podded yam-bean.

yammer (yam'er), v. i. [Also yammer, yammer; < ME. zammeren, zomeren, zommeren, < AS. geōmērian (= OHG. jamarōn, MHG. jameren, G. jamern), lament, groan, < geōmor, sad, mournful (= OS. jamar = OHG. jamar, sad, > OHG. jamar, MHG. jamar, G. jammer, lamentation, misery).] 1. To lament; wail; shriek; yell; cry aloud; whimper loudly; whine. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

As for the White Maiden of Avenel, she is seen to yammer and wail before any o' em dies. Scott, Monastery, iv.

"The child is doing as well as possible," said Miss Grizzy; "To be sure it does yammer constantly—that can't be denied."

Miss Ferrier, Marriage, xviii.

2. To yearn; desire. [Prov. Eng.]

I yammer to hear how things turned awat.

Tim Bobbin, in Mackay's Lost Beauties of the Eng. Lang.

yammering (yam'er-ing), n. [Also yammering; verbal n. of yammer, v.] A crying, whining, or grumbling. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

They ill-thrawn folk . . . would tear the congregation to pieces wi' their bickerings and yammerings.

W. Black, in Far Lochaber, ix.

yammerly (yam'er-li), adv. [*< ME. zamerly, zomerly, < AS. *geōmorlice, < geōmorlic, lamentable, < geōmor, sad; see yammer, v.*] Piteously. Gawayne.

yamp (yamp), n. [N. Amer. Ind.] An umbelliferous plant, Carum Gairdneri, found from California to Wyoming and Washington; doubtless, also, C. Kelloggii, of central California. These plants have fasciated tuberous roots, which are an important food of the Indians.

yamun (yā'mun), n. [Chinese, < ya, the marquess of a general, + mun, a two-leaved door, a gate.] The official and private residence of a Chinese mandarin who holds a seal; the place where a mandarin transacts the business of the region or department under his care, and where he lives; a mandarin's office, court, residence, etc.

The three yamuns at our feet, with their quaint towers, grand old trees, flags, and the broad Pearl River on the other side of the city, are the only elements of positive beauty in the landscape.

Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, II. xxii.

Tsung li yamun, the bureau or department of the Chinese government which attends to foreign affairs; the Chinese "Foreign Office." It was established in 1860, is composed of eleven members, and forms the channel of communication between the foreign ministers and the throne. Giles.

yang (yang), v. i. [Imitative.] To cry as the wild goose; honk.

yang (yang), n. [< yang, v.] The cry of the wild goose; a honk.

yang-kin (yang'kēn'), n. [Chinese.] A Chinese dulcimer.

yank<sup>1</sup> (yank), v. [Perhaps a nasalized form of yack, found in sense of 'talk fast', prob. orig. move quickly, < Sw. dial. jakka, rove about, a secondary form of Icel. jaga, move about, = Sw. jaga = Dan. jage, hunt, chase, hurry, = D, colors as decorations and ceremonial insignia. The elephant-headed god Ganesha is usually represented as flourishing the chowry with his trunk over the heads of various personages of the Hindu pantheon. Yaks have often been taken to Europe, where they are kept in menageries, and have repeatedly been bred in confinement. The yak crosses easily with some other cattle, producing various mixed breeds. See also cut under Artiodactyla.—Yak lace, a heavy and rather coarse lace made from the silky hair of the yak: at one time much used for trimming outer garments.

yakin (yā'kin), n. A large Himalayan antelope, Budorcas tataricolor, inhabiting high mountain-

Tufts's Glossary of Thieves' Jargon (1798).

yar<sup>1</sup> (yar), v. t.; pret. and pp. yarréd, ppr. yarring. [Also yarré. See yarré; < ME. garren, garren, garren, garren, < AS. garrian, garrian, garrian (= MHG. garren), roar, cry, rattle, chatter.] To snarl; gnarl.

Urruhart, tr. of Rabelais, II. xxii. (Davies.)

yaraget (yar'ä), n. [yare<sup>1</sup> + -age.] Naut., the power of moving or capability of being managed at sea: used with reference to a ship.

To the end that he might, with his light ships, well manned with water-men, turn and environ the galleys of the enemies, the which were heavy of yarage, both for their bigness, as also for lack of water men to row them.

North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 777.

yarb (yärb), n. A dialectal form of herb.

Her qualifications as white witch were boundless cunning, . . . [and] some skill in yarbs, as she called her simples.

Kingley, Westward Ho, iv.

yard<sup>1</sup> (yär'd), n. [Early mod. E. also yard: < ME. yerd, zerd, < AS. gyrd, gyrd, gyrd, a rod, = OS. gerda = D. garde, a rod, twig, = OHG. garta, garta, MHG. G. gerte, a rod, switch; from the more primitive noun, OHG. MHG. gert, a rod, yard, = Goth. gards, a goad, = Icel. gaddr = AS. gād, E. goad (the AS. gād, if = Goth. gards, involves an irregular contraction, and may be a diff. word); cf. L. hasta, a spear; see goad, gad<sup>1</sup>, and hastate.] 1. A rod; a stick; a wand; a branch or twig.

The gyrd of a tre that is haled down by myhty strengthe bowith redly the crop adoun.

Chaucer, Boethius, iii. meter 2.

The cros I kalle the herdis [shepherds] gyrde; Therwith the denyl a dunt he gaf.

Ye han of us as now the governance."

Chaucer, Frol. to Clerk's Tale, I. 22.

3. A measuring-rod or stick of the exact length of 3 feet or 36 imperial inches; a yardstick.

You would not, sir, had I the gyrd in hand, Idle measure your pate for this delusion.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, ed. 1874, II. 40).

4. The fundamental unit of English long measure. The prototype of the British imperial yard (to which the United States Office of Weights and Measures conforms, though without express authority) was legalized in 1855. It is a bar made of a kind of bronze or gun-metal known as Baily's metal. It has a square section of 1 inch on the sides, and is 33 inches long. But at 1 inch from each end a well is drilled into one of its surfaces so that the bottom is in the central plane of the bar, and into the bottom of the well is sunk a gold plug, upon whose mat surface is engraved one of the two defining lines. The yard is defined as the distance between these lines at 62° F., with the understanding that the bar is to be supported in a particular manner, and that the thermometers are to be constructed according to certain rules. The lines are designed to be looked at with the microscopes of a comparator; but they are not so free from blur that their middles can be determined more nearly than to a millionth part of the distance between them. This standard was made after the practical destruction of the previous legal prototype, that of 1760, in the burning of the Houses of Parliament, October 16th, 1834, and was legalized as a new prototype because its length agreed with what had been recognized in 1819 by the Standards Commission as the scientific standard yard—namely, with a certain scale, or rather with Captain Kater's measures of that scale, known as Shuckburgh's scale, having been made in 1794 by Troughton for Sir George Shuckburgh, who in his comparisons of it first introduced the comparator with micrometer microscopes. This scale was a copy of another which had been made for the Royal Society in 1742, from which the standard of 1760 was copied. This was a bar having upon one side two gold studs, each with a dot pricked upon it; and it was used by bringing the points of a beam-compass into these dots, which had thus soon become badly worn. Older standards still extant are those of Queen Elizabeth and of Henry VII. The latter is shorter than the present yard by one thousandth part of its length, or about  $\frac{1}{8}$  of an inch. It is said that the yard was made to be of the length of Henry I.'s arm—doubtless a fable, even if believed by that monarch himself. Customary units are not changed so easily. Yet it is true that there appear to be no traces in the measures of buildings earlier than the twelfth century of the use of a yard equal to ours, nor of its subdivisions; while in the later Norman and Gothic structures a foot equal to the third of our yard has often clearly been used. But the Gothic architects of England more usually employed a foot of 13 $\frac{1}{2}$  modern inches, a unit probably derived from France; and the oldest works show a foot of 12 $\frac{1}{2}$  modern inches, no doubt the old Saxon foot, agreeing very nearly with the Rhineland foot of modern Germany. Some British remains, as Stonehenge, were evidently constructed with Roman measures. The Standards Commission of 1819 reported that 37 inches of cloth were frequently given for each yard, which is almost precisely Rhinish measure. They also found local yards of 38 and 40 inches. As a cloth measure, the yard is divided into 4 quarters = 16 nails. (See cloth-measure, under measure.) A square yard contains 9 square feet, and a cubic yard 27 cubic feet. Contracted yd.

Robin Hood and the Peddlers (Child's Ballads, V. 244).

That there might be no Abuse in Measures, he [Henry I.] ordained a Measure made by the Length of his own Arm, which is called a Yard. Baker, Chronicles, p. 38.

5. Naut., a long cylindrical spar having a rounded taper toward each end, slung crosswise to a mast and used for suspending certain of the sails called either square or lateen sails according as the yard is suspended at right angles or obliquely. Yards have sheave-holes near their extremities for the sheets reeving through. Either end of a yard, or rather that part of it which is outside the sheave-hole, is called the yard-arm; the quarter of a yard is about half-way between the sheave-hole and the slings. Going upward from the deck, the yards are known as the lower yards, top-sail, topgallant, and royal yards, except where double topsails are used, when the top-sail yard is replaced by the lower and upper topsail-yards. Lower yards and topsail-yards are sometimes made of iron, and hollow. See cuts at aboz, a-cockbill, cockcomb, and ship.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxx.

The cracks and rents that had fissured their [the kilns'] walls, from the fierce heat that once blazed within, were yawning hideously. Gekkie, Geol. Sketches, i.

Specifically—2. To open the mouth wide. (a) Voluntarily.

The crocodiles not only know the voice of the priests when they call unto them, and endure to be handled and stroked by them, but also yawn and offer their teeth unto them to be picked and cleansed with their hands.

Holland, t. of Plutarch, p. 794.

(b) Involuntarily, as through drowsiness or dullness; gape; oscitate. Compare yawning.

When a man yawneth he cannot hear so well.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 283.

At every line they stretch, they yawn, they doze.

Pope, Dunciad, ii. 390.

And, leaning back, he yawned and fell asleep,

Lulled by the chant monotonous and deep.

Longfellow, Wayside Inn, The Sicilian's Tale.

3. To gape, as in hunger or thirst for something; hence, to be eager; long.

The chiefest thing which lay-reformers yawn for is that the clergy may through conformity in state and condition be apostolical, poor as the Apostles of Christ were poor.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., iv. § 3.

4. To be open-mouthed with surprise, bewilderment, etc.; be agape.

To yawn, be still, and wonder,

When one but of my ordinance stood up

To speak of peace or war. Shak., Cor., iii. 2. 11.

II. trans. 1. To open; form by opening. [Rare.]

The groaning Earth began to reel and shake,

A horrid Thunder in her bowels rumbles, . . .

Tearing her Rocks, Untill she yawn a way

To let it out, and to let-in the Day.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawe.

2. To express or utter with a yawn.

"Heigho," yawned one day King Francis,

"Distance all value enhances!"

Browning, The Glove.

yawn (yân), n. [Cf. yawn, v.] 1. The act of gaping or opening wide.

Sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,

Opens a dismal passage to the dead.

Addison, tr. from Silius Italicus's Punicorum, ii.

2. An involuntary opening of the mouth from drowsiness; oscitation. See yawning.

From every side they hurried in,

Rubbing their sleepy eyes with lazy wrists,

And doubling overhead their little fists

In backward yawns.

Keats, Endymion, ii.

The family is astir; and member after member appears with the morning yawn.

yawner (yā'nér), n. One who yawns.

yawning (yā'ning), n. [Verbal n. of yawn, v.] Gaping; oscitation; the taking of a deep inspiration, followed by a slight pause, and then a prolonged expiration, the mouth being more or less widely open. The act is reflex and involuntary in character, though it can often be partially repressed by a strong effort of the will. It is the physiological expression of fatigue and of a desire to sleep, but is also excited by insufficient oxygenation of the blood, and occurs therefore in conditions of lowered vitality, in the prodromal stage of many diseases, and after profuse losses of blood. The sight of another person yawning is also provocative of the act.

yawningly (yā'ning-li), adv. In a yawning manner; with yawns or gapes.

Ye . . . that leaning upon your idle elbow yawningly patter out those prayers.

Bp. Hall, The Hypocrite, Sermon on 2 Tim. iii. 5.

Many were merely attracted by a new face, and, having stared me full in the title-page, walked off without saying a word; while others lingered yawningly through the preface, and, having gratified their short-lived curiosity, soon dropped off one by one.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 358.

yawp (yāp), v. and n. A dialectal form of yelp.

Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

The lady, who was a little in years, having parted with her fortune to her dearest life, he left her.

Goldsmith, Register of Scotch Marriages.

Julian year. (a) A period of 365½ days. (b) Incorrectly, a year of the Julian calendar.—Leap year. See leap-year.—Legal year, the year by which dates were reckoned, which until 1752 began March 25th: hence it was usual between January 1st and March 25th to date the year both ways, as February 19th, 1745–6 (that is, 1746 according to present reckoning).—Lunar year, a period consisting of 12 lunar synodical months, or 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, 36 seconds. The common lunar year consists of 12 lunar civil months, or 354 days.—Lunisolar year.
See lunisolar.—Mohammedan year, a purely lunar year of 12 months, having alternately 30 and 29 days, except that in certain years the last month has 30 days instead of 29. These years are the 2d, 5th, 7th, 10th, 13th, 16th, 18th, 21st, 24th, 26th, and 29th of each cycle of thirty years.
The years are counted from the hejira, A. D. 622, July 15th.

—Natural year. Same as tropical year.—Planetary years. See planetary.—Platonic year, a great cycle of years at the end of which it was supposed that the celestial

II. n. 1. The color of gold, butter, the neutral chromates of lead, potassium, etc., and of light of wave-length about 0.581 micron. It has some remarkable properties, which are due to the fact that by far the greater part of the visible spectrum consists of two regions, in either of which any three colors being taken a suitable mixture of the extreme ones will match the middle one, and that the yellow is about the middle of one of these regions which contains four fifths of all the visible light of the solar spectrum. This region is bounded by the scarlet and the emerald green; the other by the emerald-green and the violet-blue. These three colors are thus the only ones which cannot be matched by mixtures of others. They are also more chromatic or high-colored than those which fall between them in the spectrum; for which reasons physicists regard these three colors as the elementary ones. (See color.) A remarkable property of the sensation with a slight heightening of intensity, the sensation with a slight heightening of the color, without changing the hue; while blue, on the other hand, is rendered pale by increased illumination, and all other colors are rendered yellowish. The name yellow is restricted to highly chromatic and luminous colors. When reduced in chroma, it becomes buff; when reduced in luminosity, a cool brown. Mixed with red, yellow goes over into orange; mixed with green, into yellow-green. Lemon-yellow and canary-yellow may be taken as pure yellows, the latter being a little greener. Sulphur-yellow is a little greenish; primrose is a little greenish and pale; gamboge is a very slightly orange yellow. By chromatic yellow is usually meant a little more orange and more intensely chromatic color. Indian, cadmium, and santon yellows are orange-yellows; Naples yellow and maize-yellow are pale orange-yellows. Ocher-yellow, clay-yellow, and wax-yellow are of somewhat diminished chroma. The first a little orange, and the last a little green. It is impossible to describe the yellows more precisely, as the slightest causes—for example, a little thicker layer of paint, or illumination from another part of the sky—change their hues decidedly.

The circles of his eyes in his head

They gloweden bitwixen yellow and reed.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1274.

Your French-crown-colour heard, your perfect yellow.

Shak., M. N. D., i. 2. 98.

2. The yolk of an egg; the vitellus: opposed to the white, or the surrounding albumen. — 3. pl. Jaundice, especially jaundice in cattle (see jaundice); hence, figuratively, jealousy.

His horse . . . sped with spavins, rayed with the yellows.

Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 54.

Thy blood is yet uncorrupted, yellows has not tainted.

Two Lancashire Lovers (1640), p. 27. (Halliwell.)

4. pl. Dyer's-weed. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] — 5. Same as peach-yellows.

The yellows is its [the peach's] most fatal disease.

New Amer. Farm Book, p. 232.

6. One of certain geometrid moths: an English collectors' name: as, the speckled yellow. — 7. Any one of the group of small yellow butterflies; a sulphur. See sulphur, n. 3. — Antimony yellow, yellow antimony. See antimony. — Cassel yellow. Same as mineral yellow. — Chinese yellow. Same as king's yellow. — Cobalt yellow, a pigment used by artists, composed of the double nitrite of potassium and cobalt. It is permanent, and more closely resembles the yellow of the spectrum than any other pigment. — Fast yellow. Same as acid-yellow. — Fol's yellow, a color formerly used in dyeing, made by heating carboic acid and arsenic in a pot. It dyes wool and silk yellow, and gives red shades with lime. — Imperial yellow, in ceram., a variety of Chinese porcelain having a uniform yellow glaze, said to be reserved for the use of the imperial family or court; also, by extension, porcelain of any make supposed to resemble this in color. — Indian yellow, a bright yellow pigment obtained in India. It is supposed to be the earth dug up from the stables where cows have been housed during the winter and fed on mango-leaves. In its crude form it comes in commerce in balls of from 3 to 5 inches, having an offensive urinous odor. It is an impure magnesium salt of euxanthic acid. For artistic purposes it is washed and levigated, the foreign material being carefully separated. Thus purified it gives an orange-yellow of great depth and beauty. It is quite permanent, and is used both as an oil and as a water color. — King's yellow, a pigment formed by subliming a mixture of arsenious acid and sulphur. It consists of arsenious acid and arsenic trisulphide, or orpiment. Also Chinese yellow. — Madder-yellow, a lake prepared from madder-root. It is bright in tone, somewhat similar to Indian yellow, but more transparent. — Manchester yellow, a coal-tar color used in dyeing, being the sodium or calcium salt of dinitro-alpha-naphthol. It is applicable to silk and wool, producing shades from pale lemon to deep orange. It is not fast to light. It is also known as Martius's yellow, naphthol yellow, golden yellow, saffron yellow, naphthalene yellow. — Mars yellow, an artificially prepared acid of iron, resembling the natural yellow ocher. It is used by artists as a pigment. — Martius's yellow. Same as Manchester yellow. — Mineral yellow. See mineral. — Montpellier yellow. Same as mineral yellow. — Naples yellow, a light yellow pigment of various shades and of varying composition. The true pigment is a basic antimoniate of lead, but it is imitated by mixtures, as of cadmium-yellow and zinc-white, or of white lead and chrome-yellow. It has a good body, and is quite permanent. — Paris yellow. Same as chrome-yellow. — Patent yellow. Same as mineral yellow. — Perfect yellow, chromate of zinc, used as a pigment by artists. It is a light, bright yellow, and is quite permanent. — Resorcinal yellow. Same as tropæolin. — Speckled yellow. See speckled. — Strontian yellow. See strontian. — Turner's yellow, an oxychloride of lead employed as a yellow pigment: same as mineral yellow.

yellowroot (yel'ô-rôt), n. 1. Same as shrub-yellowroot.—2. An American herb, Hydrastis Canadensis, named also orange-root, yellow-puccoon, Indian paint, turneric-root, and especially (in medicine) goldenseal. Its rootstock contains hydrastine and berberine, and is an official remedy of an unquestioned tonic property and with various powers less settled, applied in dyspepsia, in jaundice and other disorders of the liver, as a laxative, alterative, etc. See Hydrastis and hydrastine. Shrub yellowroot. See Xanthorrhiza and shrub yellowroot.

yellowrump (yel'ô-rump), n. The yellow-rumped warbler, Dendroica coronata, the yellow-crowned warbler, or myrtle-bird. See warbler and myrtle-bird.—Western yellowrump. Audubon's warbler, Dendroica auduboni. See warbler.

yellow-rumped (yel'ô-rumpt), a. Having the rump (or upper tail-coverts in some cases) yellow, as various birds. (See yellowrump.) The yellow-rumped seed-eater is a certain finch, Crithagra chrysopyga.

yellow-sally (yel'ô-sal'i), n. See yellow sally, under sally, 2.

yellowseed (yel'ô-sed), n. A species of peppergrass, Lepidium campestre, native in the Old World, introduced in North America; mithridate pepperwort.

yellow-shafted (yel'ô-sháf'ted), a. Having the shafts of certain feathers yellow: as, the yellow-shafted flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker, Colaptes auratus. See cut under flicker, 2, and compare red-shafted.

yellowshank, yellowshanks (yel'ô-shangk, -shangk), n. Same as yellowlegs. Compare greenshank, redshank.

yellowshell (yel'ô-shel), n. A British geometrid moth, Camptogramma bilineata, whose yellow wings are marked with white lines.

yellowshins (yel'ô-shinz), n. Same as yellowlegs.

yellow-shouldered (yel'ô-shöl'derd), a. In ornith., having the bend of the wing yellow, or having yellow on the carpal angle of the wing: as, the yellow-shouldered amazon, a South American parakeet, Chrysotis ochroptera.

yellow-spotted (yel'ô-spot'ed), a. Spotted with yellow: as, the yellow-spotted tortoise of the Galapagos. — Yellow-spotted willow-slug. See willow-slug.

Yellowstone trout. See trout, 1.

yellowtail (yel'ô-täl), n. and a. 1. n. 1. An earthworm yellow about the tail. Topsell, Serpents, p. 307. (Hallivell.)—2. One of various fishes. (a) A carangid fish of the genus Seriola as S. dorsalis. See cut under amber fish. [U. S.] (b) A carangid fish, Elegatis pinnulatus. [Florida.] (c) A carangid fish, Caranx georgianus. [Auckland, New Zealand.] (d) A scienoid fish, Bairdiella chrysura, the silver perch. [U. S.] (e) A sparoid fish, Lagodon rhomboides, the pinfish. See cut under Lagodon. [U. S.] (f) A scorpenoid fish, Sebastes inermis, one of the rockfishes. [California.] (g) A clupeoid fish, Brevoortia tyrannus, the menhaden. See cut under Brevoortia. [U. S.] (h) A gadoid fish, Lotella baccata, the trumpeter. (i) A gadoid fish, Lotella baccata. [New Zealand.]

II. a. Yellow-tailed. — Yellowtail moth, Liparis auriflua, a British species. — Yellowtail warbler. See warbler.

yellow-tailed (yel'ô-täld), a. Having the tail more or less yellow: specific in many phrase-names of animals.

yellowthroat (yel'ô-thrôt), n. Any bird of the old genus Trichas (of Swainson), now Geothlypis: as, the Maryland yellowthroat. See cut under Geothlypis.

yellow-throated (yel'ô-thrô'ted), a. Having the throat more or less yellow: specific in many phrase-names of animals: as, the yellow-throated finch, warbler, etc.—Yellow-throated greenlet or vireo, Vireo flavifrons, a common greenlet of eastern North America, of rather large size and stout-billed, having the whole throat and breast bright-yellow, the other under parts white, the upper parts yellowish-green.

yellow-top (yel'ô-top), n. A variety of turnip: so called from the color of the skin on the upper part of the bulb.

yellow-vented (yel'ô-ven'ted), a. Having the vent-feathers yellow, or being yellow on the crissum: as, the yellow-vented bulbul, Pycnonotus crocorrhous.

yellow-weed (yel'ô-wed), n. 1. Same as weld.—2. A common name of coarse species of goldenrod. See Solidago.

yellow-winged (yel'ô-wingd), a. Marked with yellow on the wing, as various birds, etc.—Blue yellow-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysotera. See cut under Helminthophaga. — Yellow-winged locust, a North American locust, or short-horned grasshopper, Tomonotus sulphureus; so called from its yellow hind wings. T. W. Harris. — Yellow-winged sparrow, a grasshopper-sparrow, Coturniculus passerinus. See cut under Coturniculus. — Yellow-winged sugar-bird, a common gultuit, Cæreba cyanea. See cut under Cæreba. — Yellow-winged woodpecker, the yellow-shafted flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker. See cut under flicker.

yellow-wood (yel'ô-wüd), n. 1. Same as fus-tic.—2. Cladrastis tinctoria, the American or Kentucky yellow-wood, in cultivation commonly known as Virgilia lutea, also called gopher-wood and yellow ash. In the wild state it is a rare tree, found locally in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Yellow-wood, Cladrastis tinctoria, a part.

North Carolina. It grows from 30 to 45 feet high, and bears pinnate leaves with seven to ten leaflets, and ample racemes of white pea-like flowers drooping from the ends of the branches. It is highly ornamental for both flowers and foliage. It has a hard yellow wood, which is used for fuel and to some extent for gunstocks, and yields a clear yellow dye. For another American yellow-wood, see Schæferia. The Osage orange, Maclura aurantiaca, of the same genus as the fustic, is sometimes so named, as is also the shrub-yellowroot, Xanthorrhiza apifolia.

3. Same as white oak. See oak.—Australian yellow-wood. See light yellow-wood and Queensland yellow-wood. Acronychia laevis, of the Rutaceae, found at Moreton Bay, is also called yellow-wood, as are Hora longipes, a tall leguminous shrub, and Xanthostemon pycnanthum, of the Myrtaceae.

Cape yellow-wood, Podocarpus Thunbergii, a small tree with bright-yellow fine-grained wood, very handsome when polished. Compare Natal yellow-wood. East Indian yellow-wood, the satin-wood, Chrysophloeus Swinhoei; also, Podocarpus latifolia, an evergreen 80 feet high, with aromatic wood. Light yellow-wood, a tree, Rhus rhodantha, of New South Wales, growing 70 or 80 feet high, peculiar in its genus in bearing large red flowers. The wood is of a light-yellow color, sound and durable, close-grained, and taking a fine polish; it is one of the best cabinet-woods of its locality. The Queensland yellow-wood has also been called by this name. — Natal yellow-wood, Podocarpus elongata, a tree from 30 to 70 feet high, with a close-grained wood extensively used in building and for furniture, though not bearing exposure. The bastard yellow-wood of the Natal region is P. pruinosa, with the wood pale-yellow, tough, and durable, extensively used for building. — Prickly yellow-wood, the West Indian Xanthoxylum Caribaeum (X. Clava-Herculis of some authors), a tree from 20 to 50 feet high; the wood is used for making furniture and inlaying; the prickly young stems are made into walking-sticks. Also called prickle-yellow. Other West Indian xanthoxylums are also called yellow wood. — Queensland yellow-wood, Flindersia Oaklegum (Flindersia xanthoxylum), also called white oak (which see, under oak) and light yellow-wood. F. Scottiana, of the same region, is a valuable shade-tree of the same name.

yellow-wort (yel'ô-wört), n. A European annual plant, Chlora perfoliata, of the gentian family. It is a very glaucous plant, about a foot high, the stem-leaves in pairs and connate-perfoliate, the flowers bright-yellow in loose terminal cymes. Also called yellow centaury.

yellow-wrack (yel'ô-rak), n. A seaweed, Ascophyllum nodosum (Fucus nodosus of Linnaeus).

yellowy (yel'ô-i), a. [< yellow + -y.] Somewhat yellow; yellowish; flavescent.

A little kerchief of cobweb muslin and ancient yellowy lace . . . is "Over her decent shoulders drawn." R. Broughton, Joan, ii. 2.

yelm (yelm), n. [*< ME. *zelin, < AS. gelm, gilm, a handful. Cf. glean*.] A handful; a sheaf of straw or grain. [Prov. Eng.]

yelm (yelm), v. t. and i. [< yelm, n.] To lay straw in order fit for use by a thatcher. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]

A woman yelming 14 days, 1s. 9d.

H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, App. II.

Through great desire of glory and of fame.
[See yew.] Spenser, F. Q., II. ix. 38.

'Tis a grievous case this, I do yield, and yet not to be despaired. [See yew.] Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 651.

I yield it just, said Adam, and submit.
[See yew.] Milton, P. L., xi. 526.

This was the fourth man that we lost in this Land-Journey; for those two men that we left the day before did not come to us till we were in the North Seas, so we yelded them also for lost. [See yew.] Dampier, Voyages, I. 17.

God yeld (or yild) you. See God 1, and def. 1 above.—
To yeld (or yild up) the breath. Same as to yild up the ghost.

O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father ere thou yild thy breath!
[See yew.] Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7. 24.

To yield up the ghost. See ghost, = Syn. 3. To supply, render. 7. To accord.

II. intrans. 1. To produce; bear; give a return for labor: as, the tree yields abundantly; the mines yielded better last year.—2. To give way, as to superior physical force, to a conqueror, etc.: give up a contest; submit; succumb; surrender.

Sir knight, thou art take; yield thou to me, for ye have don I-nough. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 461.

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 2. 11.

Guendolen the Daughter [of Cornues] yelds to marry.

Milton, Hist. Eng., i.

No more, dear love, for at a touch I yield:

Ask me no more.

Tennyson, Princess, vi. (song).

4. To give place, as inferior in rank or excellence.

Their mutton yields to ours, but their beef is excellent.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, i. 6.

Tell me first, in what more happy fields

The thistle springs, to which the lily yields.

Pope, Spring, l. 90.

yield (yēld), n. [Early mod. E. also yeld; < ME. yeld, geld, gield, gild, < AS. geld, gield, gild, payment, = OS. geld = OFries. geld = OHG. MHG. gelt, payment, money, G. geld, money, = Icel. gjald, payment, etc.; from the verb: see yield, v., and cf. gild<sup>2</sup>, gelt<sup>2</sup>.] 1. ylang-ylang, n. A tall tree of the custard-apple family, Cananga odorata, native in Java and the Philippines, cultivated throughout India and the tropics. It bears drooping yellow flowers, 3 inches long, which furnish the ylang-ylang oil of perfumers.—Ylang-ylang oil. See oil.

ylet, n. An obsolete form of isle<sup>1</sup>, aisle, eel, etc.

Y-level (wi'lev'el), n. The common engineers' spirit-level: so called formerly from the fact that the telescope rests on "Ys." In the Y's the telescope can be rotated at pleasure. The Y-level has been to a certain extent superseded by the so-called "dumpy-level," or Gravatt level, and by other improved instruments combining more or less completely the peculiarities of the Y-level and the dumpy-level. Also written wy-level.

The dumpy level differs from the wye level in being attached to the level bar by immovable upright pieces; in having the level tube firmly secured to the uprights of the level bar; in being provided with an inverting eye-piece (unless ordered otherwise); and in the absence of the tangent and slow-motion screws.

Buff and Berger, Hand-Book and Ill. Catalogue, 1891.

The most perfect form [of level] now in use being the improved Dumpy Level, resting on Y's, and named the improved dumpy Y Level: it appears to unite in itself all the good qualities of the others, retaining few of their imperfections.

yoga (yō'gā), n. [Hind. yoga, < Skt. yoga, union, devotion, < √ yuj, join: see yokel<sup>1</sup>.] One of the branches of the Hindu philosophy, which teaches the doctrines of the Supreme Being, and explains the means by which the human soul may obtain final emancipation from further migrations, and effect a junction with the universal spirit. Among the means of effecting this junction are comprehended a long continuance in various unnatural postures, withdrawal of the senses from external objects, concentration of the mind on some grand central truth, and the like, all of which imply the leading of an austere hermit life.

yogi (yō'gi), n. [Hind. yogi, < yoga: see yoga.]

A Hindu ascetic and mendicant who practises the yoga system, and combines meditation with austerity, claiming thus to acquire a miraculous power over elementary matter. See yoga.

Also yogee and jogi.

Then Rawunna, the giant, assuming the shape of a pilgrim Yogee rolling to the caves of Ellora—with Gayntree the mystical text on his lips and the shadow of Siva's beard in his soul—rolls to Rama's door, and cries "Alms!

whole; the vitellus, whether formative wholly or in part. In holoblastic ova, which are usually of minute or microscopic size, the whole content of the cell wall is yolk which undergoes complete segmentation and is therefore formative or germinal vitellus, or morphocytus. In large meroblastic eggs, however, such as those we eat of various birds and reptiles, the true germ yolk forms only the nucleus and a relatively small part of the whole yolk-ball, which then consists mainly of food yolk or trophocytus. This is the yolk of ordinary language, forming a relatively large ball of usually yellow and minutely granular substance which floats in a mass of white or colorless albumen, inclosed in a delicate pellicle, or vitelline membrane, and is steadied or stayed in position by certain strands of stringy albumen forming the chalazae. The quantity of germ- and of food yolk relatively to each other and also to the amount of white varies much in different eggs, as does also the relative position of the two kinds of yolk. (See ectolecithal centrolecithal.) In the largest eggs, as of birds, the great bulk results from the copiousness of the white and of the food-yolk, and the germ-yolk appears only at a point of the surface of the latter, where it forms the so-called tread or cicatrícula. Some eggs contain more than one yolk, but this is rare and anomalous. See egg, ovum, and vitellus; also segmentation of the vitellus (under segmentation), and cuts under gastrulation.

The tother (man) was salowere thene the golk of a naye [an egg].
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 3284.

2. The vitellus, a part of the seed of plants, so named from its supposed analogy with the yolk of an egg.—3. The greasy sebaceous secretion or unctuous substance from the skin of the sheep, which renders the fleece soft and pliable; wool-oil.

Is not the yoke, or natural oiliness of the wool in the animal, more efficacious?

Agria. Surv. of Gallonau, p. 283. (Jamieson.)

Food yolk. See food-yolk, microblastic, and triphloecithus.
—Formative yolk, germinal yolk, which enters into the formation of the embryo, as distinguished from the food-yolk, which does not undergo segmentation; morpholecithus; vitellus germinativus. See leibolastic.—Glycerite of yolk of egg, a mixture of yolk of egg (43 parts) with glycerin (55 parts), used as a vehicle for medicinal oils and resins.

yolk-bag (yôk'bag), n. Same as yolk-sac.

yolk-cleavage (yôk'klê'vâj), n. In embryol., segmentation of the vitellus (which see, under segmentation). See cut under gastrulation.

yolk-duct (yôk'dukt), n. In embryol., the ductus vitellinus, or vitelline duct, which conducts from the cavity of the umbilical vesicle to that of the intestine through a constriction, at and near the navel, of the original globular cavity of the yolk-sac. See cut under embryo.

yolked (yôkt), a. [< yolk + -ed<sup>2</sup>.] Furnished with a yolk or vitellus: frequently used in composition: as, a double-yolked egg.

The effect of the loss of a large food-yolk . . . was shown to resemble a similar loss of food-yolk in the eggs of Micrometrus as compared with other large-yolked oviparous fish eggs.
Amer. Nat., XXIII. 923.

yolk-gland (yôk'gland), n. Same as vitellarium.

yolk-sac (yôk'sak), n. The umbilical vesicle (which see, under vesicle). Also called yolk-bag. See cuts under embryo and uterus.

While the yolk in the latter is minute as compared with that of the former, the yolksack is just as large.
Amer. Nat., XXIII. 926.

yolk-segmentation (yôk'seg-men-tâ'shon), n. Same as yolk-cleavage. See segmentation of the vitellus (under segmentation), and cut under gastrulation.

yolk-skin (yôk'skin), n. The vitelline membrane; the delicate pellicle which incloses the yolk of an egg, especially when this is large.

yolk<sup>y</sup> (yô'ki), a. [< yolk + -y<sup>1</sup>.] 1. Resembling or consisting of yolk; having the nature of yolk.

In addition to the minute yolk-spherules scattered through the protoplasm, there are a few larger bodies, . . . probably of a yolk<sup>y</sup> nature.
Micros. Sci., XXX. 6.

2. Greasy or sticky, as unwashed wool. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

Because of the yolk<sup>y</sup> fleece.

New York Semi-weekly Tribune, Aug. 16, 1887.

Yucca is the dwarf palmetto, or mound-lily. The preceding and several others are favorites in cultivation, chiefly under the name guinea; 8 species cultivated near Nice now begin to form a characteristic feature of some parts of the Mediterranean coast. Some species yield an edible fruit, as Y. baccata, the Spanish bayonet, or Mexican banana, a native of Mexico, extending into western Texas, New Mexico, and southern parts of Colorado and California; a strong coarse fiber, made into rope by the Mexicans, is procured from the leaves by macerating them in water. The name Spanish bayonet is also applied to other species, especially to Y. congesta (Y. elata), which occurs in Mexico and the United States from western Texas to Utah, grows from 9 to 15 feet high, and produces a light brown or yellowish wood; and to Y. treculeana (including Y. canaliculata), a long-leaved species of Texas and Mexico, sometimes 25 feet high and 2 feet thick, producing a bitter but sweetish fruit which is cooked and eaten by the Mexicans. It has its branches all near the top, produces great numbers of showy white flowers of a porcelain luster, followed by an edible berry. Y. brevifolia, known as Joshua-tree, native of Arizona and southern parts of Utah, Nevada, and California, a tree sometimes 40 feet high and about 3 feet in diameter, forms in the Mohave desert a straggling open forest; its light soft wood is sometimes made into paper-pulp. Y. whipplei of southern California is much admired for its beauty in cultivation. Y. yucatana of Central America is branched from the base.

yucca-borer (yuk'ā-bor-er), n. 1. A large North American castnioid moth, Megathymus yucca, whose larva bores into the roots of plants of the genus Yucca. — 2. A Californian weevil, Yuccaborus frontalis.

called by Hodgson Polyodon, and by Cabanis Odonturus. Four species occur in the Himalayan region and western China — Y. galensis, Y. diademata, Y. occipitalis, and Y. nigrimentum.

yuke, r. and n. Same as yuck.

yukkel, n. Another spelling of yuckel for hick-wall.

yulan (yō'lan), n. [Chinese, < yu, yuh, a gem (jade), + lan, plant.] A Chinese magnolia, Magnolia conspicua, with abundant large white flowers, appearing in spring before the leaves. It is a fine ornamental tree, in China 30 or 40 feet high, but in Europe and America smaller; in the United States it is only half-hardy at the north. A kindred hardy species, also from China, is M. aborata (M. purpurea), with flowers pink-purple on the outside and white within, beginning to appear before the leaves.

Yule (yöl), n. [Also dial., in comp., yu (yu-batch, yu-block, etc.); more prop., according to the ME. form, spelled **yool*; early mod. E. sometimes ewle; < ME. yol, yole, zol, December, < AS. geöl, gehol, gehel (ML. Giulus, December (sc ærra geōla, December, sc æftera geōla, January, the months beginning respectively before and after the winter solstice), = Icel. jöl = Sw. Dan. jul (> MLG. jul), Yule, the Christmas feast; = Goth. juleis in fruma juleis (appar. 'first Yule'), applied, in a fragment of a calendar, appar. to November. The mod. E. use seems to be due to Scand. rather than to the AS. Origin unknown; according to a common view, the word is identified with Icel. hjól, wheel, with the explanation that it refers to the sun's 'wheeling' or turning at the winter solstice. This notion, absurd with regard to the alleged connection of thought, is also phonetically impossible; the AS. word for wheel was hweol, and could have no connection with geöl. Another explanation connects the word with *yawl*¹, yowl, howl, cry; as if yule was orig. the 'noise' of revelry. This is also untenable. The Goth. juleis implies an AS. **jule*, an unstable form variable to **geole* or geöl (= Icel. jöl); the forms gehol, gehel, are rare, and may be mere blunders.] The season or feast of Christmas.

I craue in this court a crystemas gomen [sport], For hit is, zol & nwe yer.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 284.

At ewle we wonten gambole, daunce,
To carrolle, and to sing,
To haue gud spiced sewe, and roste,
And plum pies for a king.
Warner, Albion's England, v. 113.

They bring me sorrow touch'd with joy,
The merry merry bells of Yule.
Tennyson, in Memoriam, xviii.

Yule block, clog, or log. Same as Christmas log. See Christmas.

A small portion of the yule-block was always preserved till the joyous season came again, when it was used for lighting the new Christmas block.
Hone, Year Book, col. 1110.

The burning of the Yule log is an ancient Christmas ceremony, transmitted to us from our Scandinavian ancestors, who, at their feast of Jul, at the winter solstice, used to kindle huge bonfires in honour of their god Thor.
Chambers's Book of Days, II. 735.

An enormous log glowing and blazing, and sending forth a vast volume of light and heat. . . . was the Yule clog, which the squire was particular in having brought in and illuminated on a Christmas eve, according to ancient custom. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 247.

Yule cake. Same as Yule dough. Howe Every-Day Book, I. 1638. — Yule candle, a huge candle used for light during the festivities of Christmas eve. In many places the exhaustion of the candle before the end of the evening was believed to portend ill luck, and any piece remaining was carefully preserved to be burnt out at the owner's like-wake.

As an accompaniment to the Yule log, a candle of monstrous size, called the Yule candle, or Christmas candle, shed its light on the festive board during the evening.

Chambers's Book of Days, II. 735.

Yule dough (dialectal doo, dow), a cake made especially for Christmas time. Also called baby-cake (because representing in shape a baby, probably the infant Christ) and Yule cake.

The Yule-Dough (or Dow), a Kind of Baby or little Image of Paste, which our Bakers used formerly to bake at this Season, and present to their Customers, in the same Manner as the Chandlers gave Christmas Candles.

Bourne's Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 163.

In the north of England the common people still make a sort of little images at Christmas, which they call Yule Dows.

Yunx (yungks), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1766 or earlier), also Iyng and Iyng, < Gr. iνγξ, the wryneck.] 1. Same as Iyng. — 2. [l. c.] The wryneck, Iyng torquilla. See cut under wry-neck.

The Yunx, a genuine Woodpecker, hath a tail as long in proportion to his body, and marked with crosse-bars too. John Ray, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 200.

yupon (yö'pon), n. Same as yapon. Sportsman's Gazetteer.

yure (yör), n. See ewer<sup>3</sup>. [Prov. Eng.]

yurt (yört), n. [Siberian.] One of the houses or huts, whether permanent or movable, of the natives of northern and central Asia. Also yourta, yourte, jurt.

It [the lake] is ten miles in circumference, and here and there are yourtes inhabited by the Mongols.

Huc, Travels (trans. 1852), I. 206.

yutu (yö'tö), n. [Peruv.] A species of tinamou, found in Peru.

A partridge called yutu frequents the long grass.

A detailed illustration of a seal, likely a harbor seal, resting on a sandy beach. The seal is shown in profile, facing right, with its head slightly raised and its mouth open as if breathing. Its body is dark and textured, with a lighter patch on its belly. The background is a simple, light-colored wash representing the sand and sky.

Zamites (zam-ī'tēz), n. [NL., < L. zamia, assumed to mean 'a fir-cone.'] The name given by Brongniart to certain fossil plants belonging to the cycads, and considered to be more or less closely allied to the living Zamia. The genus Zamites first appears in the Trias but is especially well developed in the Jurassic, it continued through the Cretaceous, and finally disappeared in the Miocene. There have been about 30 species described. The cycadeaceous flora played an important part in the vegetation of Greenland and Spitzbergen during the Jurassic epoch, giving an almost tropical aspect to the forests of that region and epoch. Various other genera of cycads allied to Zamites have been established, chiefly, if not entirely, based on the forms of the leaves and their segments. Among these are Glossozamites, a genus with long elliptical leaves, found in the Lower Cretaceous; and Otozamites, with small elliptic-lanceolate leaves, divided into several groups in accordance with the very varying form of the segments of the leaf. The latter genus runs through the whole of the Jurassic, as far as the lower division of the Upper or White Jura, when it gives way to the genus Zamites. It has not been observed in the Jurassic rocks of the arctic regions. Phorophyllum, Tetraphyllum, Phorophyllum, Ptilozamites, Pterozamites, Araucodactylites, and Sphenozamites are other genera of cycads more or less allied to Zamites and to one another.

zamouse (za-mōs'), n. [W. African.] A West African buffalo, or bush-ox, found in Sierra Leone, Bos brachyceros, the short-horned buffalo, having the ears fringed with hair, short horns depressed at base, and no dewlap.

zampogna (tsām-pō'nyā), n. [It.] 1. Same as bagpipe.—2. Same as shawm.

zanana (za-nā'nā), n. Same as zenana.

Zanclodon (zang'klō-don), n. [NL. (Plein), < Gr. ζαγκλον, sickle, + ὄντις (ōntis) = E. tooth.] A genus of dinosaurs, typical of the family Zanclodontidae, having both fore and hind feet five-toed, no ascending astragalar process, broad and long pubes, and biconcave vertebrae.

Zanclodontidae (zang-klō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zanclodon (t) + -idae.] A family of carnivorous theropod dinosaurs, typified by the genus Zanclodon, from the Trias of Europe.

Zanclognatha (zang-klog'nā-thā), n. [NL. (Lederer, 1857), < Gr. ζαγκλον, sickle, + γναθος, jaw.] A genus of small noctuid moths resembling pyralids. Ten European and several North American species are known. Z. mivalis feeds in the larval state on the dead leaves of oak and maple in the United States.

Zanclotomus (zang-klos'tō-mus), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1837), < Gr. ζαγκλον, sickle, + τόμος, mouth.] A genus of cuckoos, the type of which is Z. javanicus of Java, and to which were formerly referred some related African forms. The species named has exposed nostrils, bare orbits, no crest, white-tipped tail-feathers, and the mantle, wings, and tail glossed with bluish-green; the under parts are gray, buff, and chestnut-brown; the orbits are bright-blue, the eyes blackish, and the beak coral-red. The length is 18 inches, of which the tail makes more than half. This handsome cuckoo ranges from Tenasserim down the Malay peninsula, and also occurs in Sumatra, Borneo, and Java.

zander (zan'dér), n. [G.] The European pike-perch, Stizostedion lucioperca (formerly Lucioperca sandra). It inhabits fresh waters of central Europe. Also sander and zant.

zand-mole (zand'mōl), n. [D. zandmol; < zand, sand, + mol, mole.] Same as sand-mole.

See cuts under Bathyergus and Georchus.

zanella (zā-nel'ā), n. A twilled fabric used for covering umbrellas. Drapers' Dict.

Zannichellia (zan-i-kel'i-ā), n. [NL. (Micheli, 1729), named after Zannichelli (1662–1729), author of a flora of Venice.] A genus of plants, of the order Naiadaceae, type of the tribe Zannichelliæ. It is characterized by the absence of a perianth, by a single stamen, with slender filament, and slightly curved sac. The only species (by some considered as forming 9 species), Z. palustris, is a native of brackish ditches and salt water throughout the world. It is a submerged slender aquatic with a filiform creeping stem, the capillary branches becoming twisted into matted floating masses. The leaves are chiefly opposite, linear or filiform; the flowers are minute, at first terminal, but becoming axillary. See horned pondweed, under pondweed.

Zannichelliæ (zan'i-ke-li'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1883), < Zannichellia + -æ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Naiadaceae. It is characterized by axillary unisexual flowers, the male with a single stamen and globose pollen, the female with its two to nine carpels each containing a single pendulous orthotropous ovule. It includes 3 genera, of which Zannichellia is the type; the others, salt-water plants with a perianth of three hyaline segments, occur in the Mediterranean region (Athenia) and in Australia (Lepilena). All are slender submerged aquatics growing from a filiform nodose creeping rootstock, and producing thread-like leaves and minute flowers.

Zanonia (zā-nō'ni-ā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), by transfer from an endogen so named by Plumier (1703) from Giacomo Zanoni (1615–82), author of a flora of Bologna, and director there of the botanic garden.] A genus of plants, of the order Cucurbitaceæ, type of the tribe Zanoniæ. It is characterized by entire leaves, and flowers with three calyx-lobes, five stamens, and three two-cleft styles. The 2 species are natives of India and the Malayan archipelago. They are shrubby climbers with petioled ovate or oblong entire leaves and unbranched tendrils. The small flowers are borne in loose pendulous panicles. The fruit is cylindrical, club-shaped, or hemispherical, with a broadly three-valved apex, and containing large pendulous broadly winged seeds; that of Z. indica is known as banglee-fruit (which see).

Zanonieæ (zan-ō-ni'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Blume, 1825), < Zanonia + -æ.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Cucurbitaceæ. It is characterized by flowers with five stamens, free filaments, oblong one-celled anthers opening by a longitudinal slit, and an ovary with three thick placentae on which the ovules are irregularly inserted. It includes 17 species, of 3 genera, of which Zanonia is the type; the others are also tropical climbing shrubs—one, Gerrardanthus, occurring in Africa, the other, Alsomitra, including most of the species, extending through Asia, America, and Australia.

Zanora palm. See palm 2.

zant (zant), n. Same as zander.

Zante (zan'te), n. A contraction of Zante-wood. Zantedeschia (zan-tē-des'ki-ā), n. [NL. (Sprengel, 1826), named from Francesco Zantedeschi, who wrote on the plants of Brescia and Bergamo in 1824.] A plant genus now known by the earlier name Richardia (which see).

Zante fustic. Same as young fustic (which see, under fustic). See also cut under smoke-tree.

Zante-wood (zan'te-wūd), n. 1. Same as Zante fustic.—2. Same as satinwood, Chloroxylon Swietenia.

zanthin, n. An erroneous form of santhin.

zantho- For words so beginning, see zantho-.

Zantiote (zan'ti-ōt), n. [ < Zante (see def.) + -ote.] A native of Zante (ancient Zacynthus), one of the Ionian Islands.

zany (zā'ni), n.; pl. zanies (-niz). [ < F. zani, < It. zanni, zane, a zany or clown; abbr. of Giovanni, John; see John, and cf. E. Jack in similar use.]

1. A comic performer, originating on the Italian stage, whose function it is to make awkward attempts at mimicking the tricks of the professional clown, or the acts of other performers; hence, an apish buffoon in general; a merry-andrew; an amusing fool.

He's like a zany to a tumbler,
That tries tricks after him to make men laugh.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 1.

He teach thee; thou shalt like my Zany be,
And feigne to do my cunning after me.
Heywood, Four Prentises of London (Works, ed. 1874, II. [203]).

The English apes and very zanies be
Of everything that they do hear and see.
Drayton, To Henry Reynolds.

Preacher at once, and zany of thy age!
Pope, Dunciad, iii. 206.

He (Granville) had been wont, in the days of his greatest insolence, to speak of the most eminent nobles as zanies, lunatics, and buffoons. Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 402.

2†. An attendant.

Lady, Imperia the courtesan's zany hath brought you this letter from the poor gentleman in the deep dungeon, but would not stay till he had an answer.
Middleton, Blurt, Master-Constable, iii. 1.

= Syn. 1. Clown, Fool, Buffoon, Mimic, Zanon. "The zany in Shakespeare's day was not so much a buffoon and mimic as the obsequious follower of a buffoon and the attenuated mime of a mimic. He was the vice, servant, or attendant of the professional clown or fool, who, dressed like his master, accompanied him on the stage or in the ring, following his movements, imitating his tricks, and adding to the general merriment by his ludicrous failures and comic imbecility. . . . The professional clown or fool might be clever and accomplished in his business, a skilful tumbler and mountebank, doing what he undertook to do thoroughly and well. But this was never the case with the zany. He was always slight and thin, well-meaning, but comparatively helpless, full of readiness, grimace, and alacrity, but also of incompetence, eagerly trying to imitate his superior, but ending in failure and absurdity. . . . We have ourselves seen the clown and the zany in the ring together, the clown doing clever tricks, the zany provoking immense laughter by his ludicrous failures in attempting to imitate them. Where there is only a single clown, he often combines both the characters, doing skilful tumbling on his own account, and playing the zany to the riders." (Edinburgh Rev., July, 1869, art. 4.)

zany (zā'ni), v. t.; pret. and pp. zanied, ppr. zanying. [ < zany, n.] To play the zany to; mimic; imitate apishly.

All excellence
In other madams do but zany hers.
Fletcher (and another?), Queen of Corinth, i. 2.
Laughs them to scorn, as man doth busie apes
When they will zanie men.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, II., iv. 1.

zanyism (zā'ni-izm), n. [ < zany + -ism.] 1. The act or practice of imitation or mimicry.—2. The condition or habits of a buffoon or a low clown: often used contemptuously.

Zanzalian (zan-zā'li-an), n. [ < Zanzalus (see def.) + -ian.] A Jacobite of the East: so called occasionally from Zanzalus, a surname of Jacobus Baradaeus. See Jacobite, 2.

zanze, n. [African.] An African musical instrument consisting of a wooden box in which a number of sonorous tongues of wood or metal are fixed. These are sounded by the finger or a stick.

Zanzibari (zan-zi-bā'ri), a. and n. 1. a. Of or pertaining to Zanzibar, a sultanate of eastern Africa. It was in 1890 made a British protectorate, confined chiefly to the island of Zanzibar, while the coast of the neighboring mainland was ceded to Germany.

The country is practically in the hands of Arabs and Zanzibari slavers and traders.
Appleton's Ann. Cyc., 1886, p. 372.

II. n. An inhabitant of Zanzibar.

zapateado (Sp. pron. thā-pā-tē-ā'dō), n. [Sp.] A Spanish dance in which the rhythm is marked by blows of the foot on the ground.

zaphra (zaf'a-rā), n. Same as zaffer.

Zaphrentis (zaf-ren'ti-nē), n. pl. [NL. (Edwards and Haime, 1850), < Zaphrentis + -inæ.] A subfamily of Paleozoic rugose stone-corals, of the family Cyathophyllidae, typified by the genus Zaphrentis. They have a free and simple corallum, and a well-developed septal fossula formed by a tubular inflection of the tabulae on one side, or replaced by a cristiform process. The tabulae are complete, but the septa are deficient or irregular, and there is usually no columella.

Zaphrentis (zaf-ren'tis), n. [NL. (Rafinesque and Clifford, 1820), prob. < Gr. ζα- intensive + φρήν, brain.] 1. The typical genus of Zaphrentinæ. The species are deeply cupped, with many septa, and a peculiar pit on one side of the interior. Z. cassedayi is an example. They lived in the Silurian and Carboniferous periods.
2. [i. c.] A species of this genus. Webster's Dict., 1890.

Zapodidae (zap-ōd'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zapus (-pod-) + -idae.] A family of rodent mammals, of the myomorph series of the order Rodentia, framed by Coues for the reception of the jumping mouse of North America, Zapus hudsonius, a small mouse-like quadruped intermediate in some respects between the Muridae, or mice proper, and the Dipodidae, or jerboas of the Old World. By some the family is considered as a subfamily of Dipodidae, under the names Zapodinae and Jaculinæ. See Zapus, and cut under deer-mouse.

Zapodinae (zap-ō-dī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zapus (-pod-) + -inae.] The Zapodidae as a subfamily of Dipodidae.

zapotilla (zap-ō-til'ā), n. Same as sapodilla.

zaptieh, n. See zabtie.

Zapus (zā'pus), n. [NL. (Coues, 1876), < Gr. ζα- intensive + ποῦς = E. foot.] The only genus of Zapodidae. Z. hudsonius is the common jumping mouse, or deer-mouse, of North America. See cut under deer-mouse.

Zaragoza mangrove. See mangrove.

zarape (za-rā'pe), n. [Sp. Amer.] Same as serape.

Men wearing vermilion zarapes about their shoulders.
The Nation, XLV III. 311.

Zarathustrian (zar-a-thōs'tri-an), a. and n. [ < Zarathustra + -ian.] Same as Zoroastrian.

Zarathustrianism (zar-a-thōs'tri-an-izm), n. [ < Zarathustrian + -ism.] The religion of Zarathustra; Zoroastrianism.

Zarathustrie (zar-a-thōs'trik), a. Same as Zoroastrie.

It cannot be denied that the Zarathustrie dogmas are pure old Aryan myths in a new shape.
Encyc. Brit., XX. 361.

Zarathustrism (zar-a-thōs'trizm), n. [ < Zarathustra (see Zarathustrian) + -ism.] Same as Zarathustrianism.

Modern Brahmanism, Zarathustrism, and Buddhism.
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 49.

zaratite (zar'a-tit), n. [After Señor Zarate, a Spaniard.] A hydrous carbonate of nickel, occurring as an emerald-green incrustation on chomrite. Also called emerald nickel.

zareba (zā-rē'bā), n. In Sudan and adjoining parts of Africa, an inclosure against enemies or wild animals, as by a thorn-hedge; a forti-is continued from its zigzag form.

Zebrina (zē'brī-nā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737; used earlier by Cavanilles, 1791). Gr. zēra, zēra, a sort of zebra; ina, a habit for horses.] A genus of plants of the tribe Malvaceæ. It is characterized by the leaves, the male forming a terminal panicle, the female a sessile spike wrapped in a husk, and consisting of pistillate flowers aggregated in many rows upon a common stalk. The only species, Z. mays, the white flowered corn of maize, long cultivated throughout the warm and temperate regions, is supposed to be of American origin but is not now known in a wild state. It is a tall plant with unbranched robust stems, large lanceolate leaves, a handsome long-stalked terminal panicle (known as the tassel), and very thick fertile spikes from the husks of which project long green slender styles known as the silk. The fruit is a hard roundish seed (known as the kernel) partly inclosed by the husk, and then in his (the cob) forming the spike or ear of corn. The seeds furnish an invaluable food to man and to domestic animals; the stalks and leaves are used for fodder, and the husks are much used for filling mattresses and horse-collars, and for making door-mats; a coarse textile fabric, also, and paper of excellent quality, have been experimentally made from them. The cob, and sometimes the whole ear, is used as fuel. The chief value lies of course in the kernel. See maize, cut in preceding column, and cut under husk. Compare corn.

zeal (zēl), n. [Early mod. E. zele; < OF. zele, F. zele = Sp. Pg. It. zele, < L. zelus, < Gr. zēlos, zeal (for zēlos), < zēra (√ zēro), boil, akin to E. quest; see quest.] Passionate ardor in the pursuit of anything; intense interest or endeavor; eagerness to accomplish or obtain some object.

They have a zeal of [for. R. V.] God, but not according to knowledge. Rom. x. 2.

Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal.

Shak., Rich. II., i. 1. 47.

Controversial zeal soon turns its thoughts on force. Burke, Rev. in France.

His fervent zeal for the interests of the state.

Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

Syn. Earnestness, Enthusiasm, etc. (see eagerness), warmth, fervor, heartiness, energy.

zeal† (zēl), v. i. [ < zeal, n.] To entertain zeal; be zealous.

Stiff followers, and such as zeal marvellously for those whom they have chosen for their masters. Bacon, Controversies of Church of Eng.

zealant†, n. See zealant.

zealed† (zēld), a. [ < zeal + -ed.] Filled with zeal; characterized by zeal.

Zealed religion.

Fletcher (and another), Love's Pilgrimage, iv. 2.

zealfull† (zēl'fūl), a. [ < zeal + -ful.] Full of zeal; zealous.

These dayes of Ours may shine

In Zeal-full Knowledge of the Truth divine.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Decay.

zealless (zēl'les), a. [ < zeal + -less.] Lacking zeal. Bp. Hall.

zealot (zēl'ot), n. [ < OF. zelote, < LL. zelotes, < Gr. zēlos, a zealot, < zēro, zeal; see zeal.] 1. One who is zealous or full of zeal; one carried away by excess of zeal; an immoderate partisan; generally in a disparaging sense.

He was one of those furious zealots who blow the bellows of faction until the whole furnace of politics is red-hot with sparks and cinders.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 299.

Like all neutrals, he is liable to attack from the zealots of both parties. Whipple, Ess. and Rev., i. 62.

2. [cap.] One of a fanatical sect or party (the Zelotæ) among the Jews of Palestine under Roman dominion, who on account of their excesses in behalf of the Mosaic law were also called Sicarii or Assassins. The Zealots gained the ascendancy in a civil war, and withstood the Romans so fiercely as to bring about the total destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70. Zealots are also mentioned (perhaps by confusion) as a sect of the Essenes, similarly characterized by fanatical zeal for their ascetic practices.

The desperate Faction of the Zealots, who, like so many Firebrands scattered up and down among them [the Jews], soon put the whole Nation into flames.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

zealotical (zēl'ot-i-kal), a. [ < zealot + -ical.] Having the character of a zealot; belonging to a body of zealots.

One Leviston, a zealotical Scotsman, a tailor, came with a gray suit of apparel [for a disguise] under his cloak. Court and Times of Charles I., II. 80.

zealotism (zēl'ot-izm), n. [ < zealot + -ism.] The character or conduct of a zealot. Gray.

zealotist (zēl'ot-ist), n. [ < zealot + -ist.] A zealous partisan; one of a body of zealots. H.

zealotry (zēl'ot-ri), n. [ < zealot + -ry (see -try).] Behavior as a zealot; excessive or undue zeal; fanaticism.

Inquisitorial cruelty and party zealotry.

Coleridge. (Imp. Dict.)

Herod is outthorowed, Sternhold is out-sternholded, with a zealotry of extravagance that really seems like wilful burlesque. De Quincey, Style, i.

zealous (zēl'us), a. [ < L. ML. zelosus, full of zeal, < zelus, zeal; see zeal. Cf. jealous, an older form of the same word.] 1. Full of or incited by zeal; zealous for the good or the promotion of some person or object; ardent; eager; fervent; devoted.

That man loves not who is not zealous too.

Herrick, Zeal Required in Love.

The learned and pious Bishop of Alexandria, Dionysius, wrote to the zealous and factious Presbyter Novatus. Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 100. (Davies.)

The clergy of New England were, for the most part, zealous promoters of the revolution.

Emerson, Hist. Disc. at Concord.

2. Caused by or manifesting zeal; due to earnest devotion; of an ardent character or quality.

So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Shak., Rich. III., iii. 7. 94.

I will study Service and friendship, with a zealous sorrow For my past incivility towards ye.

Ford, Broken Heart, v. 1.

= Syn. 1. Forward, enthusiastic, fervid, keen. See zeal. zealously (zēl'us-li), adv. In a zealous manner; with passionate ardor; fervently; earnestly.

It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing.

Gal. iv. 18.

Sir, I will amply extend myself to your use, and am very zealously afflicted, as not one of your least friends, for your crooked fate. Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 2.

zealousness (zēl'us-nes), n. The quality of being zealous; ardor; zeal.

zealousy† (zēl'us-i), n. [Early mod. E. zealousie; < zealous + -y. Cf. jealousy.] 1. Zealousness.

His hand eternally, his arm his force,

His armour zealousy, his breast-plate heaven.

Middleton, Solomon Paraphrased, v.

2. An old form of jealousy.

The zealousie and the eagle ferreuses of Olimpias.

Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 200, note.

zebec, zebeck, n. Same as zebec.

zebra (zē'brā), n. and a. [= F. zèbre, < African zebra.] 1. n. An African solidungulate mammal, related to the horse and ass, of the genus Equus and subgenus Hippotigris, having the body more or less completely striped. There are at least 3 well-marked species. One of these is the quagga. The second is the bonte-quagga, or Burchell's zebra. (See cut under dawu.) The third is the true zebra, E. (H.) zebra, of southern Africa, of a whitish color, very fully and regularly striped with black; it is specifically called the mountain zebra. This zebra stands about 4½ feet high at the shoulder; the head is light, the ears are moderately large, the limbs slender; the mane is short, and the tail tufted. The general form is light and symmetrical, like that of most wild asses, and seems to indicate speed rather than bottom. The zebra is one of the most beautiful of animals, as it is also one of the wildest and least tractable. It has often been kept in confinement, and occasionally tamed, but generally retains its indomitable temper. It inhabits in herds the hilly and mountainous countries of South Africa, seeking the most secluded places; so that from the nature of its haunts, as well as its watchfulness, swiftness, and the acuteness of its senses, it is difficult to capture. It is, however, much hunted, and seems destined to extermination.

II. a. Resembling the stripes of a zebra; having stripes running along the sides: as, the zebra markings on certain spiders. Stareley.

zebra-caterpillar (zē'brā-kat'ēr-pil-ār), n. The larva of Mamestra picta, a North American noctuid moth: so called from the longitudinal black and yellow stripes. It feeds on clover, peas, beans, cabbages, turnips, and various other cultivated plants. See cut on following page.

zebra-opsossum (zē'brā-ō-pos'um), n. The zebra-wolf. See cut under thylacine.

zebra-parakeet (zē'brä-par'a-kēt), n. A kind of grass-parakeet, Melopsittacus undulatus, much of whose plumage is barred. It is a common cage-bird. See cut under Melopsittacus.

Zebrapicus (zē-brä-pi'kus), n. [NL. (Malherbe, 1849), also Zebrapicus (Bonaparte, 1854), < zebra, q. v., + NL. Picus.] A genus of woodpeckers: so called from the extensive striping of the plumage. It has covered a number of American forms, but was based on the common red-bellied woodpecker of the United States, and is thus a synonym of Centurus (itself often merged in Melanerpes). See cut under Centurus.

zebra-plant (zē'brä-plant), n. A striped-leaved plant, Maranta zebrina. See Maranta.

zebra-poison (zē'brä-poi'zn), n. A succulent tree, Euphorbia arborea, of South Africa. The milky juice is so poisonous as to kill zebras which drink water in which the branches have been placed, and it is sometimes used as an arrow-poison. J. Smith, Dict. of Economic Plants.

zebra-shark (zē'brä-shärk), n. The tiger-shark.

zebra-spider (zē'brä-spi'der), n. A hunting-spider or wolf-spider. See Lycosidæ, and cuts under tarantula and wolf-spider.

zebra-swallowtail (zē'brä-swol'ō-tāl), n. The ajax, Papilio (or Iphiclitides) ajax, a large swallow-tailed butterfly of North America, having yellowish-white wings barred with black. It is a handsome species, and occurs from Pennsylvania southward. The larva feeds on the pupaw.

zebra-wolf (zē'brä-wūlf), n. The pouched dog or thylacine dasyure of Tasmania, Dasyurus thylacinus or Thylacinus cynocephalus, a large predaceous and carnivorous marsupial quadruped somewhat resembling a wolf, having the back and rump transversely striped (whence the name). See cut under thylacine.

zebra-wood (zē'brä-wūd), n. 1. The wood of Connarus Guianensis (Omphalobium Lambertii), of the Connaraceæ, a tall tree of Guiana; also, the tree itself. The wood is hard and beautifully marked, and is much sought for use in making furniture.—2. The wood of a small evergreen, Guetarda speciosa, of the Rubiaceæ, found on tropical shores in both hemispheres.—3. In the West Indies, a shrub or small tree, Myrtus (Eugenia) fragrans, var. cuneata.

zebra-woodpecker (zē'brä-wūd'pek-ēr), n. Any one of the striped woodpeckers of Malherbe's genus Zebrapicus—that is, of Centurus in a usual sense. See cut under Centurus.

zebrine (zē'brin), a. [zebra + -ine.] Resembling or related to the zebra; striped like a zebra; pertaining to the subgenus Hippotigris: correlated with equine and asinine. Darwin.

Zebu (Bos indicus, var.).

zebu (zē'bū), n. [F. zebu, a name accepted by Buffon from the exhibitors of the animal at a French fair, and supposed by him to be an African word. If not invented, it is prob. intended to represent the E. Ind. zobo, q. v.] The Indian bull, ox, or cow; any individual or breed of Bos indicus, having a hump on the withers. The zebu has been domesticated from time immemorial, and is now known only in its artificial breeds. These are numerous, and very various in size, shape, and color; the processes of artificial selection having modified the original stock in almost every particular. The characteristic hump is sometimes double. The flesh is considered a delicacy. The size of different breeds of zebus varies much. Some are as large as ordinary cattle, others no larger than a common calf a month or two old. The color is usually light gray, varying to pure white. The bulls of the latter color are consecrated to Siva, and become Brahmin bulls, exempt from labor or molestation. Zebus are bred particularly in India, but also in China, Japan, and some parts of Africa. They are used as beasts of burden and of draft, and as riding-animals, as well as for beef. The stock from which they have descended is by some naturalists supposed to represent only a variety of Bos taurus, the original of the ordinary domestic ox. See cut in preceding column.

zebug (zē'bub), n. [Ar. zubāb, dhubāb, Heb. zebūb, fly. Cf. Beelzebub.] A large Abyssinian fly noxious to cattle, like the tsetse and the zimb.

zebu-cattle (zē'bū-kat'), n. The cattle of the eastern hemisphere which have a hump, like the zebu. Darwin.

zebuder, n. The Caucasian ibex. Also called zac.

zecchino (tsek-kē'nō), n. [It.: see sequin.] A gold coin of the Venetian republic, worth rather more than 9s. English, or about $2.25: same as sequin.

Zecchino of Paolo Ramero, Doge of Venice 1778-1780.—British Museum. (Size of original.)

zechin, n. A variant of sequin.

Zechstein (zek'stin), n. [G., < zeche, a mine, + stein, stone.] In geol., the uppermost of the two divisions of the Permian, the lower being the so-called "Rothliegende." This twofold character of the Permian is a well-marked feature of the system in Germany, especially in the central part of that country; hence it is not infrequently called the Dyas, a word coined in imitation of the name Trias. At the bottom of the Zechstein is the "Kupferschiefer," a thin bed of dark-colored, bituminous, and cupriferous shale. The Zechstein proper is a calcareous rock, becoming dolomitic in its upper section, and containing, especially in Prussia, masses of rock-salt of extraordinary thickness. The Permian covers an extensive area in Russia, where, however, its dual character is much less distinctly marked than it is in Germany. In the east of England this feature of the Permian is clearly exhibited, and the so-called "Magnesian Limestone group" is the equivalent of the German Zechstein. No separation of the Permian into divisions has been satisfactorily made out in North America, where the break between that formation and the Carboniferous is far less distinct than it is in the regions of its typical development in Germany.

zed (zed), n. [= F. zède, < L. zeta, < Gr. ζῆτα, the name of the letter Z. 1. The letter Z, also called zee and sometimes izzard.

Zed, thou unnecessary letter! Shak., Lear, ii. 2. 69.

2. A metal bar rolled so as to have a cross-section resembling the letter Z.

Angles, Zeds, Channels, Beams, Bars.

The Engineer, LXXI. p. xxxviii. of adv'ts.

Zedland (zed'land), n. [zed + land.] A designation of the western part of England, from the dialectal use there of the sound of z for that of s. Hallivell.

zedoary (zed'ō-ā-ri), n. [F. zédoaire = Sp. Pg. zedoaria = It. zettorario: see seticall.] An East Indian drug, known in two varieties as long and round zedoary. According to some authorities these are both the product of Curcuma Zedoaria (the C. Zerumbet of Roxburgh); according to others, only the long zedoary belongs to this species, the round to C. aromatica (the C. Zedoaria of Roxburgh). Both varieties are aromatic, with a strong camphoraceous flavor and the odor of ginger. In medicine, zedoary acts like ginger, but is less effective. It is used in India in various alterative decoctions and in preparing kinds of incense. The rhizome of C. aromatica, like the related turmeric, is used in dyeing—its chief application.

Zeidæ (zē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Swainson, 1839), < Zeus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, so named from the genus Zeus, but usually called Zenidæ. See cut under dory, 1.

zein (zē'in), n. [Zea + -in.] A proteid obtained from maize, said to be allied to gluten.

It has a yellowish color, and is soft, insipid, and elastic. It differs essentially from the gluten of wheat. Also zeine.

zeitgeist (tsit'gist), n. [G.; < zeit, time (= E. tide), + geist, spirit (= E. ghost).] The spirit or genius of the time; that general drift of thought or feeling which particularly characterizes any period of time: a German word occasionally used in English.

zel (zel), n. [Turk. Pers. zil, a bell, cymbal.] An Oriental form of cymbal.

Where, some hours since, was heard the swell

Of trumpet and the clash of zel,

Bidding the bright-eyed sun farewell.

Moore, Lalla Rookh, The Fire-Worshippers.

Zelanian (zē-lā'ni-an), a. [NL. Zelanía (Nova Zelandia, New Zealand) + -an.] In zoogeog., of or pertaining to New Zealand: more fully Novo-Zelanian. See New Zealand subregion, under subregion.

zelanti, n. [Also zealand; < LL. zelan(t)-s, ppr. of zelare, have zeal for; < L. zelus, zeal: see zeal.] A zealot. Also zealand.

To certain zealants all speech of pacification is odious. Bacon, Unity in Religion (ed. Spedding, Ellis, and Heath).

Advertisement touching an Holy War written (by Bacon) in the form of a Dialogue, in which the interlocutors represent a Moderate Divine, a Protestant Zelant, a Romish Catholic Zelant . . . E. A. Abbott, Bacon, p. 426.

zelator (zel'ā-tor), n. [LL. zelator, < zelare, have zeal for: see zelant.] A zealous partizan or promoter; a zealot.

Many zelatours or fauourers of the publyke weale haue benne discouraged. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 27.

Ze (zē'le), n. [NL. (Curtis, 1831), said to be < Gr. ζῆλη, a female rival.] A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the family Braconidæ, distinguished from Macrocentrus principally by having the abdomen inserted between the posterior coxæ. Ten North American and three European species have been described. They are parasitic upon small lepidopterous larvæ.

Zelkova (zel-kō'vā), n. [NL. (Spach, 1841), from the Cretan name zelkova.] A genus of apetalous trees, of the order Urticaceæ and tribe Celtideæ. It is characterized by monocious or polygamous flowers, the male with a short-lobed perianth, the female with an eccentric two-parted style and uniovulate ovary, in fruit somewhat ventricose and drupaceous, smooth or veiny on the surface, and often keeled on the back, containing a compressed concave seed with broad cotyledons. There are 4 species, natives respectively of Crete, the Caucasian and Caspian region, Japan, and China. They are trees bearing alternate serrate or crenate feather-veined leaves, with narrow slender stipules. The flowers are sessile or short-pedicelled, the male in small clusters, the female solitary in the upper axils. Z. crenata (formerly known as Planera Richardi), the zelkova- or zelkova-tree of the Caucasus, reaches a considerable size, sometimes 80 feet high and 4 feet in diameter; in its scaly bark it resembles the plane-tree, in its leaves the elm; the small greenish-brown flowers have the odor of the elder, and are followed by roundish fruits of the size of a pea. Its timber is much prized; the sap-wood is light-colored and elastic; the hard heavy reddish heart-wood takes a good polish, and is valued for furniture. For Z. acuminata, see keyaki.

zeloso (dze-lō'sō), a. [It.: see zealous.] Zealous: in music, marking passages to be rendered with zeal, enthusiasm, or energy.

zelotypia (zel-ō-tip'i-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῆλον, πια, jealousy, rivalry, < ζῆλος, πιος, jealous, < ζῆλος, zeal, + τύπος, strike: see type.] The exercise of morbid perseverance and energy in the prosecution of a project, especially one of a political or religious nature; a form of monomania sometimes manifesting itself in overzeal in attempts to gain supporters to any public cause.

zelotypic (zel-ō-tip'ik), a. [zelotypia + -ic.] Pertaining to, characterized by, or exhibiting zelotypia.

zelousiet, n. See zealousy.

zemindar (zem'in-dār), n. [Also zamindar; < Pers. zemindār, a landholder, < zemīn, land, + -dār, holding.] Originally, one of a class of farmers of the revenue from land held in common by its cultivators, established by the Mogul government of India, every one in a specially assigned tract or district; now, in many provinces, a native landlord, regarded as a successor of the preceding, and similarly responsible for the land-tax, who under British regulations has become the actual proprietor of the soil under his jurisdiction, often with right of primogeniture.

The Zemindars of Lower Bengal, the landed proprietary established by Lord Cornwallis, have the worst reputation as landlords, and appear to have frequently served it.

Maine, Village Communities, p. 163.

zemindary (zem'in-dā-ri), n.; pl. zemindari (-riz). [Pers. zemindari, < zemindār, zemindar.] 1. The office or jurisdiction of a zemindar.—2. The tract of territory administered

(b) Pertaining to Zeno of Citium, the founder of the Stoic school of philosophy, who lived between 350 and 250 B. C. He committed suicide at an advanced age.

II. n. A Stoic.
Zenonic (ze-non'ik), a. [< Zenon(n-) + -ic.] Same as Zenonian.

Heraclitus's system was the polar antithesis to this Zeno-nomic position. The Academy, April 21, 1888, p. 278.

Zenopsis (zē-nop'sis), n. [NL. (Gill, 1862). < Zeus (Zen-) + (Gr. opsis, aspect).] A genus of dories, of the subfamily Zeninae, differing from Zeus mainly in having only three instead of four anal spines. The type is Z. nebulosus of Japan; another species is Z. ocellatus of the New England coast, of a nearly plain silvery color, but with a black lateral ocellus. See cvt under Zenidae.

zenu (zē'nö), n. The goitered antelope, or yellow goat, Procapra gutturosa. See dzeren.

zeolite (zē'ō-lit), n. [So called by Cronstedt from boiling and swelling when heated by the blowpipe; < Gr. zeo, boil, foam, + lithos, stone.] A generic name of a group of hydrated double silicates in which the principal bases are aluminum and calcium or sodium. They are closely allied to the feldspars among anhydrous silicates. They are decomposed by acids, often with gelatinization and most of them intumesce before the blowpipe. Among them are analcite, chabazite, harmotome, stilbite, etc. They occur most commonly in cavities and veins in basic igneous rocks, as basalt or diabase, as at Bergen Hill, New Jersey: they thus often fill the cavities in amynoldoid.

zeolitic (zē-ō-lit'ik), a. [Zeolite + -ic.] Pertaining to zeolite; consisting of zeolite or resembling it.

zeolitiform (zē-ō-lit'ī-fōrm), a. [zeolite + L. forma, form.] Having the form of zeolite.

zeolitization (zē-ō-lit-i-zā'shon), n. [< zeolite
+ -ize + -ation]. The process by which a min.

+ -ize + -ation.] The process by which a mineral is converted into a zeolite by alteration—for example, nepheline into thomsonite.

Zephyranthes (zef-i-ran'thēz), n. [NL. (Herbert, 1821), so called in allusion to the slender, easily agitated stalks; < Gr. ζέφυρος, the west wind, + άνθος, flower.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Amaryllidaceae and tribe Amaryllideae. It is characterized by one-flowered scapes, and flowers with a short or rather long perianth-tube, sometimes with small scales around the stamens, slender separate filaments, oblong or linear versatile anthers, and numerous biseriate ovules in the three ovary-cells. There are about 30 species, natives of America from Texas to the Argentine Republic, with one in western tropical Africa, the latter formerly known as Haemanthus. They are bulbous plants with a few linear or thong-shaped leaves, and an elongated scape bearing a handsome erect or slightly declined solitary flower, either pink, white, purple, or yellowish. They are known in general as swamp-lily. Z. atamasco, found from Mexico to Pennsylvania, with rose-colored flowers, is cultivated under the name of fairy-lily or atamasco-lily; and Z. candida, of Lima and Buenos Ayres, with white flowers and small rush-like leaves, under the name of Peruvian swamp-lily.

Zephyrus (zef'i-rus), n. [L. Zephyrus, < Gr. ζέφυρος, a personification of ζέφυρος, the west wind.] 1. In classical myth., a personification of the west wind, poetically regarded as the mildest and gentlest of all the sylvan deities.

When Zephyrus eek with his sweet breath
Inspired hath in every holt and heath
The tender croppes.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 5.

Courteous Zephyrus

On his dewy wings carries perfumes to cheer us.

Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, ii. 1.

2. [NL. (Dalman, 1816).] In entom., a genus of butterflies, of the family Lycenidae, chiefly of Europe and Asia, characterized by peculiarities of the wing-venation; the zephyrus.

zerda (zēr'dā), n. A small African fox; a fennec. The name is applied to two very different animals: (a) Vulpes or Fennecus zerda, a small true fox. See fox, and cut under fennec. (b) Otocyon or Megalotis lalandi. See Megalotinae.

zereba, zeriba, n. See zareba.

Zerene (zē-rē-nē), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816; Treitschke, 1825), prop. Xerene, < Gr. ξερηνή, dry up.] A notable genus of geometrid moths, typical of a family Zereneidae or subfamily Zereneinae. They have broad, entire, and slightly hyaline wings; the body is slender, and the male antennae are plumose, with the branches long, slender, and slightly frizzled. The most noted species is Z. catinaria of the northern United States, a white moth, often with blackish dots, whose greenish-yellow black-spotted larva feeds on a variety of forest-plants.

Zerenidae (zē-ren'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Guenée, 1844), < Zerene + -idae.] A family of geometrid moths, comprising many beautiful forms, usually white or yellow, spotted with black. It includes 20 genera, of which Abraxas is the most important. From their maculation they are known as panther, jay, or magpie moths, and one genus is called Pantherodes.

Zereninae (zēr-ē-nī-nē), n. pl. [NL. < Zerene + -inae.] The Zerenidae as a subfamily of Geometridae.

zero (zē-rō), n. [F. zéro, < It. Sp. zero, contr. of zefro, zifro, < Ar. sifr, cipher: see cipher, of which zero is a doublet.] 1. Cipher; the figure 0, which stands for naught in the Arabic notation for numbers.

As to number, they [the teeth of fishes] range from zero to countless quantities. Owen, Anat., § 70.

2. The defect of all quantity considered as quantity; the origin of measurement stated as at a distance from itself; nothing, quantitatively regarded. Upon a thermometer or any similar scale zero is the line from which all the divisions are measured in the positive and negative directions. Upon the centigrade and Réaumur's thermometers, it is the point at which the mercury stands when the thermometer is plunged into a mass of melting ice coarsely pulverized, from which some makers allow the water to drain off, but it is better not to do so. For some years after a thermometer is made the zero is said to rise—that is, the melting-point of ice stands higher and higher upon the scale. Upon the Fahrenheit thermometer the distance on the glass stem between the melting-point of ice and the temperature of steam at one English atmosphere of tension is divided into 180 degrees, and 32 such degrees below the melting-point of ice is marked as zero.

If the directions of all the external forces pass through the origin, their moments are zero, and the angular momentum of the system will remain constant.

Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, art. lxxi.

Hence—3. Figuratively, the bottom of the scale; the lowest point or ebb; a state of nullity or inanition.

The diplomatic circle (in Constantinople) was at zero. Stratford Canning, in Dict. Nat. Biog., VIII. 432.

Absolute zero of temperature. See absolute.—Displacement of zero. See displacement.—Zero magnet, a magnet used for adjusting the zero reading of a galvanometer or similar instrument.—Zero potential, in elect. See potential.

zeroaxial (zē-rō-ak'si-āl), a. [ < zero + axial.] Having an axis composed of zeros.—Zeroaxial determinant. See determinant.

zerumbet (zē-rūm'bet), n. An East Indian drug—according to some, the same as cassumunar. It has sometimes been confounded with the round zedoary.

zest (zest), n. [ < OF. zeste, one of the partitions which divide the kernel of a walnut, also the peel of an orange or lemon, < L. schistos, < Gr. σχιστός, divided, cleft: see schist.] 1. The dry woody membrane covering or forming the partitions of a walnut or other nut or fruit, as an orange or a lemon. [Obsolete, or only French.]—2. A piece of the outer rind of an orange or lemon used as a flavoring or for preserving; also, oil squeezed from such a rind to flavor liquor, etc. Imp. Dict.—3. Relish imparted or afforded by anything; piquant nature or quality; agreeableness; charm; piquancy.

The zest

zest (zest), v. t. [ < zest, n.] 1. To add a zest or relish to; make piquant, literally or figuratively.

My Lord, when my wine's right I never care it should be zested. Clobber, Careless Husband, iii. (Davies.)

Hundreds sunk to the bottom by one broadside furnish out the topic of the day, and zest his coffee.

Goldsmit, Abuse of our Enemies.

2. To cut, as the peel of an orange or a lemon from top to bottom into thin slips, or to squeeze, as orange-peel, over the surface of anything.

Imp. Dict.

zeta<sup>1</sup> (zē-tā), n. [Gr. ζῆτα, the letter ζ, ζ: see Z, zed.] The sixth letter of the Greek alphabet, corresponding to the English Z.—Zeta function, one of a series of functions connected with elliptic integrals of the second kind, and derived from Jacobi's zeta function, Zu, which differs only by a multiple of u from JdnZu.du, so that

$$Zu + Zv - Z(u + v) = k^2 sn u, sn v, sn(u + v).$$

zeta<sup>2</sup> (zē-tā), n. [ < LL. zeta for dieta, a chamber, dwelling, < Gr. διαίτα, way of living, mode of life, dwelling: see dict.] A little closet or chamber: applied by some writers to the room over the porch of a Christian church where the porter or sexton lived and kept the church documents. Britton.

zetetic (zē-tet'ik), a. and n. [ < Gr. ζητητικός, < ζητεῖν, seek, inquire.] 1. a. Proceeding by inquiry; seeking.—The zetetic method, in math., the analytical method used in endeavoring to discover the value of unknown quantities or to find the solution of a problem. [Rare.]

II. n. A seeker: a name adopted by some of the Pyrrhonists.

zetetics (zē-tet'iks), n. [Pl. of zetetic (see -ics).] That part of algebra which consists in the direct search after unknown quantities. [Rare.]

Zeuctocelomata (zūk'tō-sē-lō-mā-tā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζευκτός, joined, + κοίλωμα, a hollow, cavity: see celoma.] Animals having a primitive archenteron in the embryo, with paired or yoked celomatic sacs or diverticula, as mollusks, worms, crustaceans, insects, and vertebrates: more fully called Metazoa zeuctocelomata. A. Hyatt.

zeuctocelomatic (zūk'tō-sē-lō-mat'ik), a. [ < Zeuctocelomata + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Zeuctocelomata.

zeuctocelomic (zūk'tō-sē-lō-mat'ik), a. Same as zeuctocelomatic.

zeugite (zū-gīt), n. See zygite.

Zeuglodon (zūg'lō-don), n. [NL. (Owen), < Gr. ζεύγω, the strap or loop of a yoke (< ζεύω, yoke, join), + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. The typical genus of the family Zeuglodontidae. Several species have been described from the Eocene of the United States and of England, as Z. cetoides of the former country, said to have attained a length of 70 feet. The genus had before been named Basilosaurus by Harlan, on the supposition that these fossils were reptiles, and has also been called Hydrarchos (by Koch), Polyp-tychodon (by Emmons), Phocodon, and Zygodon. See cut under Zeuglodontia.

2. [l. c.] A member of this genus; a zeuglodon.

zeuglodon (zūg'lō-dont), a. and n. [As Zeuglodon (t-).] 1. a. Having teeth (apparently) yoked in pairs; having the characters of, or pertaining to, the Zeuglodontia.

II. n. A fossil cetacean of the suborder Zeuglodontia; a zeuglodon.

Zeuglodontia (zūg'lō-don'tshi-ā), n. pl. [NL.: see Zeuglodon.] A suborder of Cete or Cetacea, represented by the zeuglodonts: sometimes made to consist of two families, the Basilosauridae (or Zeuglodontidae) and Cynorhidae. The intermaxillaries were expanded forward, normally interposed between the maxillaries, forming the terminal as well as anterior margin of the upper jaw; and the nasal apertures were produced forward, with freely projecting nasal bones. The teeth of the intermaxillaries were conic, and those of the maxillaries were two- or three-rooted. Also called Phocodontia and Archæoceti. Also Zeuglodontes.

Zeuglodontidae (zūg'lō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zeuglodon (t-) + -idae.] A family of fossil toothed cetaceans, typified by the genus Zeuglodon, and representative of the Zeuglodontia. These primitive cetaceans in some respects approached the seals, or pinniped mammals, and some of the characters of the fragmentary remains first discovered caused them to be mistaken for reptiles. Also called Basilosauridae. See cut under Zeuglodontia.

zeuglodontoid (zūg'lō-don'toid), a. and n. [As Zeuglodon (t-) + -oid.] Same as zeuglodon.

zeugma (zūg'mā), n. [ < Gr. ζεύγω, lit. a yoking, < ζεύω, yoke, join: see yoke, join.] 1.

A figure in grammar in which two nouns are joined to a verb suitable to only one of them, but suggesting another verb suitable to the other noun; or in which an adjective is similarly used with two nouns.—2. [cap.] [NL.] In entom., a genus of hemipterous insects. Westwood.

zeugmatic (zūg-mat'ik), a. [ < zeugma (t-) + -ic.] Pertaining to, or of the nature of, zeugma.

Zegobranchia (zū-gō-brang'ki-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζεύγω, yoke, + βράγχια, gills.] Same as Zygobranchiata.

Zeugophora (zū-gōf'ō-rā), n. [NL. (Kunze, 1818), < Gr. ζεύγω, a yoke, + φέρω, to bear = E. bear.] A genus of leaf-beetles, of the family Chrysomelidae, having a lateral prothoracic tubercle and emarginate eyes. The geographical distribution of this genus is remarkable, for of the 20 or more species known two are found in Ceylon and farther India, while the rest are North European and North American.

zeunerite (zī-nēr-īt), n. [Named after Director Zeuner, of Freiberg.] A hydrous arseniate of copper and uranium, occurring in bright-green tetragonal crystals, isomorphous with torbernite.

Zeus (zūs), n. [ < Gr. Ζεύς (gen. Διός, also Ζηνός) = L. Jovis (gen.), Ju-piter, etc.: see Jove, Jupiter, deity.] 1. In Gr. myth., the chief and master of the gods, the supreme deity, omnipresits acid a design on prepared zinc. [Eng.]

zinc (zing'kō), v. i. [< zinc, n.] To etch with acid a zinc plate containing on its surface a design intended for printing by typographic methods. [Eng.]

Drawings Wanted (on litho paper for zincing) for a Provincial Journal. Athenaeum, No. 3235, p. 591.

zincode (zing'kōd), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. δῶς, way (cf. anode, cathode).] The negative pole of a voltaic battery; the anode of an electrolytic cell.

zincograph (zing'kō-gráf), n. [See zincography.] A plate or a picture produced by zincography. Also zincotype.

Reproduced in zincograph by the aid of photography. Edinburgh Rev., CXLV. 231.

zincograph (zing'kō-gráf), v. i. [< zincograph, n.] To transfer a design to the surface of a zinc plate with intent to etch it and make therefrom a plate in relief.

zincographer (zing-kog'ra-fér), n. [< zincography + -er.] One who makes zincographic plates.

zincographic (zing-kō-gráf'ik), a. [< zincography + -ic.] Relating to zincography.

zincographical (zing-kō-gráf'i-kál), a. [< zincography + -al.] Same as zincographic.

zincography (zing-kog'ra-fí), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. γραφω, < γραφω, write.] The art of producing on zinc a printing surface in relief by etching with dilute acid the unprotected parts of the plate. Compare paniconography.

zincoid (zing'koid), a. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling zinc.—Zincoid pole of a voltaic cell, the negative pole, or zincode, constituted by the zincous plate connected with a copper plate which forms the positive pole; the anode of an electrolytic cell. See chlorous pole, under chlorous.

zincolysis (zing-kol'i-sis), n. [< NL. < zincum, zinc, + Gr. λύσις, dissolving.] A mode of decomposition occasioned by an electrical current; electrolysis.

zincolyte (zing'kō-lit), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. λυτός, verbal adj. of λύω, dissolve.] A body decomposable by electricity; an electrolyte.

zincopolar (zing'kō-pō'lär), a. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + E. polar.] Having the same polarity as the zinc plate in a galvanic cell.

zincotype (zing'kō-tip), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. τύπος, type.] Same as zincograph.

The two volumes are copiously illustrated by a zincotype process. Athenaeum, No. 3233, p. 492.

zincous (zing'kus), a. [< zinc + -ous.] Pertaining to zinc, or to the negative pole of a voltaic battery.—Zincous element, the basic or primary element of a binary compound.—Zincous pole, that pole of a particle of zinc, or of hydrochloric acid, which has the attraction or affinity which is characteristic of zinc, or the zincous attraction.

zinc-plating (zingk'plā'ting), n. Plating in zinc, executed with a preparation made of coarse rasped or granulated zinc boiled in a mixture of sal ammoniac and water. The deposit has a silvery brightness, and can be used as a first coat for articles to be twice plated, since any other metal can be deposited upon zinc. E. H. Knight.

zinc-salt (zingk'sált), n. A salt of which zinc is the base.

zinc-spinel (zingk'spin'el), n. Same as gahnite.

zinc-vitriol (zingk'vit'ri-ol), n. In chem., zinc sulphate; white vitriol ( $\text{ZnSO}_4 + 7\text{H}_2\text{O}$ ). It is found as a native mineral (goslarite), as a product of the oxidation of zinc-blende, and can also be prepared by dissolving zinc in dilute sulphuric acid, and by roasting native zinc sulphate. It is used as a dryer in oil-paints and varnishes, as a mordant in dyeing, as a disinfectant, and sometimes as a source of oxygen.

Zingaro, Zingano (zing'ga-rō, -nō), n.; pl. Zingari, Zingani (-rē, -nē). [It.: see Gipsy.] A Gipsy.

zingel (zing'el), n. [G.; cf. umzingeln, encircle (see ingle).] A fish of the family Percidæ and zinghot, n. [Appar. intended for zinc, It. form of zinc.] Same as zinc.

For cobolt and zingho, your brother and I have made all inquiries. Walpole, To Mann, July 31, 1743.

Zingian (zin'ji-an), a. and n. A name sometimes given to the South African family of tongues: same as Bantu.

Zingiber (zin'ji-bér), n. [NL. (Adanson, 1763; used earlier by Lobel, 1576, and, as Gingiber, by Mattioli, about 1554), < L. zingiber, < Gr. ζῖγγι-βερῖς, ginger: see ginger.] A genus of plants, type of the order Zingiberaceæ and of the tribe Zingibereæ. It is characterized by a cone-like inflorescence, each flower having a three-celled ovary and a stamen composed of a short filament and an anther with contiguous cells having the connective extended into a long linear appendage—the two lateral stamens either absent or represented by two small adnate stamens. About 33 species have been described, of which perhaps 23 are distinct. They are natives of India and of islands of the Pacific and Indian Oceans. They are leafy plants with horizontal tuberous rootstocks, the sterile stems differing from the flower-bearing ones. The dense cone of flowers is composed of imbricated bracts, each with from one to three flowers and spathaceous bractlets. The inflorescence is sometimes borne on a leafless scape, more or less covered with sheaths, in other species terminating a leafy stem, or apparently lateral upon a recurved peduncle. Each flower produces a membranous or hyaline tubular calyx, and a cylindrical corolla-tube dilated into narrow spreading lobes, the posterior one erect and incurved. The fruit is a globose or oblong capsule, finally irregularly ruptured, and discharging rather large oblong seeds with a lacerate aril which is sometimes much larger than the seed. The pungently aromatic roots of several species are the source of the ginger of commerce, especially those of Z. officinale, the ginger-plant of India (see cut under ginger). The root of Z. Cassumunar, of India, is used as a tonic and stimulant, and is cultivated under the name of cassumunar ginger or Bengal root. Also Zinziber.

Zingiberaceæ (zin'ji-bē-rā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Richard, 1808), < Zingiber + -aceæ.] An order of monocotyledonous plants, of the series Epigynæ, distinguished from the order Musaceæ by its single perfect stamen. It is characterized by irregular flowers with distinct calyx and corolla, inferior ovary, usually arillate seeds, and an embryo in a canal in the center of the albumen. There are over 470 species, of 36 genera, classed in 3 tribes, of which Zingiber, Maranta, and Canna are the types. They are perennial tropical herbs growing from a horizontal thickened rootstock, their leaves chiefly radical, large and ornamental, with numerous parallel veins diverging obliquely from the midrib. Their flowers are often of great beauty, as in species of Hedyotis, Alpinia, Curcuma, Kæmpferia, and Canna; in many, especially Mantistia, they resemble orchids. They have a strong tendency to petaloid development, producing richly colored bracts in Curcuma; three petaloid stamens and two scales usually represent the five imperfect stamens. The order contains many of the most stimulating aromatics, products derived chiefly from the root or rhizome of the plants ginger, galangale, and zedoary, of the genera Zingiber, Alpinia, and Curcuma; also from the fruit or seeds, as cardamoms and grains-of-paradise, from species of Anomum and Elettaria. The order also yields the valuable dye turmeric from Curcuma, a purple dye from Canna, and arrowroot from Maranta and Curcuma. The mucilaginous juice of species of Costus is used in medicine; edible tubers are produced by species of Maranta, an edible fruit by Glozza, and a tough fiber by Phrynium and Catappa. Also Zinziberaceæ.

zingiberaceous (zin'ji-bē-rā'shius), a. Of or pertaining to ginger, or the Zingiberaceæ.

Zingibereæ (zin'ji-bē-rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1883), < Zingiber + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the order Zingiberaceæ, typified by the genus Zingiber. It is characterized by flowers with a tubular or spathaceous calyx and a single stamen, the two lateral undeveloped stamens being often represented by petaloid stamens; and by an ovary with three cells or three parietal placentæ, and a slender free style which at its apex clasps the two anther-cells. It embraces 23 genera, principally tropical, including the large and important aromatic genera Anomum, Curcuma, and Alpinia (besides Zingiber), as also many of the most highly ornamental plants of the order.

zink, n. See zinc.

zinke (tsing'ke), n. [G. zinke, a cornet.] A small cornet of wood or horn, once very common in Germany. It had usually seven finger-holes, and a cupped mouthpiece. It was made in several sizes, and both straight and curved. The serpent is properly a development of the old zinke or cornetto.

zinkiferous (zing-kif'e-rus), a. [Also zinciferous, zinkiferous; < zinc (zink) + L. ferre = E. bear.] Containing or producing zinc: as, zinkiferous ore.

zinkification (zing'ki-fi-kā'shon), n. [Also zincification; < zinkify + -ation (see -fy).] The process of coating or impregnating an object with zinc, or the state resulting from such process.

zinkify (zing'ki-fi), v. t.; pret. and pp. zinkified, ppr. zinkifying. [Also zincify; < zinc (zink) + L. -ficare, < facere, make.] To cover or impregnate with zinc.

zinkite (zing'kit), n. [Also zincite, zinkite; < zinc (zink) + -ite.] A native oxid of zinc, found at Franklin Furnace and Stirling Hill, near Ogdensburg, in Sussex county, New Jersey. It is brittle, translucent, of a deep-red color, sometimes inclining to yellowish. Also called red zinc ore, or red oxid of zinc.

zinky (zing'ki), a. [Also zincky; < zinc (zink) + -y.] Pertaining to zinc; containing zinc; having the appearance of zinc.

The Zincky Ores [of common galena] are said to be greyer than other Ores.

Kirwan, Mineralogy (1796), II. 218.

Zinnia (zin'i-ä), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1763), named after J. G. Zinn (1727-59), who wrote on the plants of Göttingen.] 1. A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Helianthoidæ, type of the subtribe Zinnieæ. It is characterized by solitary radiate flower-heads with a conical or cylindrical receptacle, the flowers both of the disk and ray being fertile, and those of the ray almost or quite without a tube, and persistent upon the ripened achene; the achenes of the inner flowers each bear from one to three awns. There are 12 species, natives of Mexico, Texas, and Arizona, 2 of which, long cultivated in gardens, are now widely naturalized. They are annuals, perennials, or sometimes shrubby plants, bearing opposite entire leaves and rather large and showy flower-heads peduncled at the ends of the branches or in the forks between them. Five species occur within the United States, mostly with light-yellow or sulphur-colored rays. The cultivated species are chiefly of various shades of deep red; they have been called youth-and-old-age, from the lasting and somewhat rigid rays and the continued production of new disk-flowers; but are more usually known by the generic name zinnia, especially in the common double form.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

Zinn's corona. An arterial plexus about the optic nerve, in the sclerotic.

Zinn's ligament. See ligament of Zinn, under ligament.

Zinn's membrane. The anterior lamella of the iris of the eye.

Zinn's zonule. See zonule of Zinn, under zonule.

zinnwaldite (zin'wol-dit), n. [< Zinnwald (see def.) + -ite.] A kind of mica related to lepidolite, but containing both lithium and iron: it is often found associated with tin ores, as at Zinnwald in the Erzgebirge.

Zinziber, Zinziberaceæ, etc. Same as Zingiber, etc.

Zion (zi'on), n. [Also Sion, LL. Sion, Gr. Ζιών, Heb. צִיּוֹן, orig. a hill.] Figuratively, the house or household of God, as consisting of the chosen people, the Israelites; the theocracy, or church of God; hence, the church in general, or heaven as the final gathering-place of true believers; so called from Mount Zion, the holy hill of Jerusalem, the center of ancient Hebrew worship.

Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her. Lam. i. 17.

Let Zion and her sons rejoice.

Zionward (zi'on-wärd), adv. [< Zion + -ward.] Toward Zion, in the figurative sense; toward the goal of salvation; heavenward.

If I were like you, I should have my face Zionward, though prejudice and error might occasionally fling a mist over the glorious vision before me.

Charlotte Brontë, in Mrs. Gaskell, viii.

zip (zip), n. [Imitative.] The sound of a bullet passing through the air or striking against an object.

The ping, zip, zip, of bullets, and the wounded men limping from the front, . . . were a prelude to the storm to come. The Century, XXX. 184.

Ziphiidæ (zi-fi'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Ziphius + -idæ.] The Ziphiinæ rated as a family apart from Physeteridæ, and divided into Ziphiinæ and Anarhynchidæ. Also, more properly, Xiphiidæ.

ziphiiform (zif'i-i-fōrm), a. Same as ziphioid.

Ziphiinæ (zif-i-i-nē), n. pl. [NL., prop. **Xiphiinæ; < Ziphius + -inæ.*] A subfamily of Physeteridæ, named from the genus Ziphius, often elevated to the rank of a family; the ziphioid or Bottle-nosed Whale (Ziphius cavirostris), one of the Ziphiinæ.

ziphiiform cetaceans, among those known as bottlenoses and cow-fishes. They have most of the lower teeth rudimentary or concealed, a distinct lacrymal bone, and a prolonged snout or rostrum above which the rest of the head rises abruptly in globose form; there is a small falcate dorsal fin; the flippers are small, with five digits; and the single median blow-hole is crescentic, as in dolphins. Several genera besides Ziphius have been recognized, of which Hyperoodon is the most prominent; but their synonyms are involved, and some distinctions which have been drawn are not clear.

Zingel (Aspro zingel).

genus Aspro; specifically, A. zingel of the Danube and its tributaries. This fish is sometimes a foot long, and is of a greenish-brown color, lighter on the side and whitish on the belly, and marked with four brownish-black bands.

Ziziphora (NL., Linnaeus, 1753). A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiate and tribe Monardrea. It is characterized by a tubular thirteen-nerved two-lipped calyx, with the throat villous within, and commonly closed after flowering by connivent teeth. There are about 12 species, natives of eastern and central Asia and of southern parts of the Mediterranean region. They are low annuals or spreading undershrubs, usually hoary with close hairs, and bearing small leaves which are nearly or quite entire. The flowers form small axillary clusters, commonly crowded upon the upper part of the stem.

Ziziphora (zi-zif'ō-rā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1753).] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiate and tribe Monardrea. It is characterized by a tubular thirteen-nerved two-lipped calyx, with the throat villous within, and commonly closed after flowering by connivent teeth. There are about 12 species, natives of eastern and central Asia and of southern parts of the Mediterranean region. They are low annuals or spreading undershrubs, usually hoary with close hairs, and bearing small leaves which are nearly or quite entire. The flowers form small axillary clusters, commonly crowded upon the upper part of the stem.

Zizyphæ (zi-zif'ē-cē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1862). < Zizyphus + -æ.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Rhamnales. It is characterized by a superior or half-superior ovary, by a disk filling the calyx-tube, and by a drupeaceous juicy or fleshy fruit with a one- to three-celled stone. It includes 9 genera, of which Zizyphus is the type. They are shrubs or trees, mainly of the northern hemisphere; one, Berberis, becomes a shrubby climber in B. vulgaris, the supple-jack of the southern United States.

Zizyphus (zi-zif'us), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700). < L. zizyphus, < Gr. ζιζυφός, the jujube-tree; see jujube.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Rhamnales, type of the tribe Zizyphæ. It is characterized by thorny branches, triple-nerved leaves, and cymose flowers each with five petals, and by a usually two-celled ovary immersed in the disk, and bearing two or three conical divergent styles. There are 65 species, natives chiefly of tropical Asia and America, occurring rarely in Africa and Australia. They are shrubs or trees, often decumbent or sarmentose, commonly covered with hooked spines. The leaves are alternate, coriaceous, entire or crenate, three- to five-nerved, and mostly arranged in two ranks. One or both of the stipules are arrescent, often ending in a hook. The small greenish flowers form short few-flowered axillary cymes. The fruit is a globose or oblong drupe, with a woody or bony stone, containing one to three seeds. The species are known in general as jujube-tree; the name jujube is given especially to the fruit of Z. sativa (Z. vulgaris), of the Mediterranean region, which is there commonly eaten fresh, or used as a cough remedy when dried. Z. jujuba, of India and China, also furnishes an excellent fruit, cultivated in numerous forms by the Chinese; a variety is known as the Chinese date. The true jujube does not now usually enter into the confection known as jujube-paste, but is commonly replaced by gum arabic or gelatin. Z. lotus, the seed is one of the reputed sources of the classical lotus-food. (See lotus-tree, 1, and lotus-tree.) Many other species bear edible fruit, as Z. Bactris, of Africa, which is there made into bread and into a pleasant beverage; several are valued for ornament on account of their foliage, or for hedges on account of their spines, especially Z. aculeata and Z. spinosa. Z. spinosa, one of the thorny thorns of the Chinese, is known as camel-thorn (which see). Z. Chloranthus, a recently determined species, is an important ornamental tree, known as cut wood. Z. Parlatiana, native of California and Ceres Island, two of the most beautiful of Florida, Z. cuneata, or black ironwood, and Z. Bactris, or blackwood, are now known to be of the same genus.

zoanthe, n. Plural of zoon.

zoæa, zoæal. See zoa, zoal.

zoamylin (zō-am'i-lin), n. [Gr. ζωή, life, + mylin.] Same as glycogen.

Zoanthacea (zō-an-thā'sē-jā), n. pl. [NL. < Zoanthos + -acea.] A suborder of Actinaria, containing permanently attached forms, as Zoanthus and related genera.

zoanthacean (zō-an-thā'sē-an), a. and n. [Gr. Zoanthacea + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Zoanthacea; zoanthoid.

Zoantharia (zō-an-thā'ri-ā), n. pl. [NL. (De Blainville, 1830). < Gr. ζῶον, animal (see zoon), + anthos, flower, + -aria.] A division (order or subclass) of Actinozoa, containing the hexamerous or hexacoralline forms; the helianthoid polyps, or animal-flowers, contrasted with the Alecyonaria, and characterized by the normal disposition of their soft parts in sixes, or multiples of six (not in eights, as in the Alecyonaria or Octocoralla), and by the possession of simple (not fringed) and usually numerous tentacles; so called from the resemblance of some of them, as the sea-anemones, to flowers.

zoantharian (zō-an-thā'ri-an), a. and n. I. a. Having the characters of or pertaining to the Zoantharia.

Zoanthidæ (zō-an-thi-dē), n. pl. [NL. (J. E. Gray, 1840). < Zoanthus + -idæ.] A family of zoantharian or hexacoralline actinozoans, typified by the genus Zoanthus. They are sea-anemones in which the individual polyps are ordinarily united by a common creeping stolon, or connective ctenosare; they multiply by buds which remain thus adherent. They have no true corallum, but a pseudo-skeleton of hard particles or spicules embedded in the ectoderm; the mesenteric septa are numerous, and of two sorts (one small and sterile, the other large and perfect and furnished with reproductive organs), generally alternating. Like most other sea-anemones, these are fixed organisms, incapable of locomotion; and they include all the colonial forms.

Zoanthinæ (zō-an-thi-nē), n. pl. [NL. < Zoanthus + -inæ.] The Zoanthidæ named as a subfamily. Edwards and Haimé, 1851.

zoanthodeme (zō-an-thō-dēm), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + anthos, a flower, + dēma, a bundle; literally, 'a bundle of animal-flowers.'] A compound zoantharian; the whole organism constituted by the coherent zooids produced by the budding of a single actinozoan polyp.

zoanthodemic (zō-an-thō-dem'ik), a. [Gr. zoanthodeme + -ic.] Of the nature of or pertaining to a zoanthodeme.

zoanthoid (zō-an-thō'id), a. [Gr. Zoanthus + -oid.] Same as zoantharian.

zoanthropic (zō-an-thrō'pik), a. [Gr. zoanthropy + -ic.] Of the nature of or pertaining to zoanthropy; as, zoanthropic mania or delusion; zoanthropic literature. This is the generic name of such delusions, which take various forms, some of which are specified according to the animal concerned, as lycanthropy.

zoanthropy (zō-an-thrō-pi), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + anthrōpos, man. Cf. lycanthropy.] A form of insanity in which a person believes himself to be one of the lower animals.

Zoanthus (zō-an-thus), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1827). < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + anthos, flower.] The typical genus of Zoanthidæ. The individual polyps are lengthened, and elevated upon a foot-stalk springing from the connective ctenosare common to the several zooids of the compound organism; the mouth is linear and transverse, and surrounded by short slender rays or tentacles. The best-known species is Z. eucha, of the European coasts; numerous others inhabit tropical seas, as Z. schuberti.

Zoanthus (zō-an-thus), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1827). < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + anthos, flower.] The typical genus of Zoanthidæ. Zoanthus eucha, two thirds natural size. a, polyp, closed; b, the same, expanded; c, stolon.

Zoarces (zō-är'sēz), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1829), also Zoarceus, Zoarhaus, and Zoarces, < Gr. ζωαρχος, life-supporting, < ζωα, life, + αρχα, assist, defend.] The name-giving genus of Zoarceidae, including such species as Z. viviparus, the so-called viviparous blenny (formerly Blennius viviparus). This is a large eelpout, with an elongate compressed body, tapering behind, heavy oblong head, a large mouth, strong conic teeth in several series, a long low dorsal fin some of the hinder rays of which are developed as sharp spines, broad pectoral fins, and jugular ventrals of three or four soft rays; the scales are small, not imbricated, but embedded in the skin. Another species, with an increased number of fin-rays and vertebrae, is Z. (Macr. arces) anguillaris, known as mud-fish and mother of eels, found from Labrador to the Middle States. 20 inches long, of a reddish-brown color mottled with olive, with a dark streak across the cheek.

Zoarceidae (zō-är'si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zoarces + -idae.] A family of fishes, named from the genus Zoarces; now generally called Lycodidae (which see). Also Zoarceida, Zoarcheida.

zoaria, n. Plural of zoarium.

zoarial (zō-ä'ri-äl), a. [zoari-um + -al.] Of or pertaining to a zoarium; composing or composed of a zoarium.

zoarium (zō-ä'ri-um), n.; pl. zoaria (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ζωάριον, dim. of ζῷον, an animal.] A polyzoary; the colony or aggregate of the polypides of a polyzoon; the polypidom or polypary of the moss-animalcules.

zobo (zō'bō), n. [Also zhobo, dsomo, etc., < Tibetan mdzopo, the male, mdzomo, the female of the mdzo, a hybrid of the yak and the so-called zebu. Cf. zebu.] A breed of zebu-cattle, supposed to be a hybrid of the common zebu with the yak, reared in the western Himalayan region for its flesh and milk, and also as a beast of burden.

zocco (zō'kō), n. [It., < L. soccus, sock; see sock!, sock!.] A sock.

zocolo, zocle (zō'kō-lō, zō'kl), n. [zoccolo, < zocco; see zocco!.] A sock.

zodiac (zō'di-ak), n. [Formerly also zodiack; < ME. zodiac, zodiak, < OF. zodiac, zodiacque, F. zodiaque = Sp. zodiaco = Pg. It. zodiacum, < L. zodiacus, the zodiac (L. orbis signifer), also adj., of the zodiac, < Gr. ζωδιακός, the zodiac, prop. adj., 'of animals,' se. κίρκρον, also called ο κύκλος ὁ τῶν ζῴων, or ὁ τῶν ζῴων κύκλος, 'the circle of animals' (also ἡ ζωδιακή, se. ὁδὸς, way), the ref. being to the constellations figured as animals; < ζῷον, dim. of ζῷον, animal; see zōon.] 1. A belt of twelve constellations, extending about 8° on each side of the ecliptic. The constellations are, Aries; ♈, Taurus; ♉, Gemini; ♊, Cancer; ♋, Leo; ♌, Virgo; ♍, Libra; ♎, Scorpio; ♏, Sagittarius; ♐, Capricornus; ♑, Aquarius; ♒, Pisces. The zodiac is also divided into twelve equal parts called signs, named after these constellations, and the first point of the sign Aries begins at the vernal equinox. The above symbols refer to the signs. The signs have been carried back by the precession of the equinoxes until they are now 25° behind the corresponding constellations on the average. But the position of the vernal equinox was originally, no doubt, between Aries and Taurus. There is strong evidence that the zodiac was formed at Babylon about 2100 B. C. There is a poetical description of the heavens written by Aratus in Macedonia in latitude about 41°, and about 270 B. C. But the appearances described were never to be seen in that latitude, nor in any latitude in that age. Thus, he mentions that the head of the Dragon—that is, Eta-min (γ Draconis)—and the waist of Cepheus—that is, Ficares (δ Cephei)—are on the circle of perpetual apparition. Now, this was true only in the latitude of Babylon, 22° N., about 2200 B. C. He also describes pretty carefully the most southerly stars seen, mentioning the star now called the Peacock's eye (α Pavonis), as well as Canopus (α Argus), but saying that there are no bright stars between the latter and Cetus, so that a Phœnicus must have been invisible. Now these descriptions will suit only a station of latitude 32° N. to 35° N., and an epoch between 1500 B. C. and 2200 B. C. Aratus also describes the courses of the tropics among the stars. That of the tropic of Cancer best agrees with 2200 B. C., that of the tropic of Capricorn with 2000 B. C. The equator is also described in a manner which answers perfectly to 2100 B. C. Finally, there are twelve descriptions of the appearances of the heavens at the rising of each of the constellations of the zodiac, which, while not very decisive, are not in positive disagreement with the other indications. But there is no doubt that the early part of the poem (written long before the precession of the equinoxes was suspected) copies indirectly early Accadian records. The zodiac was, therefore, formed before 2000 B. C. It cannot have been formed very long before, since there is much reason to believe that the constellation Aries either contained the sun or rose just before the sun at the time of the vernal equinox. Now, it was about 2100 B. C. when the vernal equinox fell upon the last point of Aries, and the other constellations were in similar mean positions. Some highly competent writers, however, regard the first formation of the zodiac as vastly more ancient. Several of the ancient constellation figures have a remarkably Babylonian character, as Virgo, Capricornus, Sagittarius, Centaurus, and Ophiuchus; one (Cepheus) has a barbarian name; and nearly all may be explained from Babylonian mythology. Two at least of the symbols for signs, those of Gemini and Scorpio, much resemble the Babylonian ideographs for the corresponding months. Yet the origin of the Bears, Auriga, Pegasus, Lyra, and Corona was probably not Babylonian. Moreover, certain subjects of common Babylonian fable, such as the tree of life, are not found among the constellations. It is noticeable that it was about 2300 B. C. that He and Ho are said to have reformed the Chinese calendar and divided the heavens into seasons; but the attempt to connect our constellations with the Chinese asterisms has conspicuously failed. The figures of the Chinese zodiac are Tiger, Rabbit, Dragon, Serpent, Horse, Ram, Ape, Cock, Dog, Pig, Rat, Bull. The zodiac was marked out by the ancients as distinct from the rest of the heavens because the apparent places of the sun, moon, and the planets known to them were always within it. This, however, does not hold good of all the newly discovered planetoids. See cuts under constellations named.

2. Figuratively, a round or circuit; a zone; a complete course.

The Poet . . . goeth hand in hand with Nature, not inclosed within the narrow warrant of her gifts, but freely ranging only within the Zodiack of his own wit.

Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

In your yeares zodiacke may you fairly moue,
Shin'd on by angels, blest with goodness, loue.
Dekker, London's Tempe.

3. In her., a bearing representing a part of the imaginary zodiacal circle, forming an arched bend or bend sinister, and with several of the signs upon it, the number being specified in the blazon.—Lunar zodiac, a circle of 27 or 28 asterisms, or groups of stars, selected and established to mark the moon's daily progress around the heavens. It was used in ancient India, in China, and in Arabia, with only minor variations in the star-groups selected. Its place of origin is uncertain and disputed.—Zodiac ring, a ring decorated with one of the signs of the zodiac, either as the sign under which the possessor was born, or perhaps the sign influencing a certain part of the body.

zodiacal (zō-di'-ä-äl), a. [zodiac + -al.] Of or pertaining to the zodiac; as, the zodiacal signs; zodiacal planets.—Zodiacal light, a luminous tract of the sky, of an elongated triangular figure, lying nearly in the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes, seen at certain seasons of the year either in the west after sunset or in the east before sunrise. It appears with greatest brilliancy within the tropics, where it sometimes rivals the Milky Way. Its nature is unknown; the most plausible hypothesis, supported by many of the most eminent modern astronomers, is that it is the glow from a cloud of meteoric matter revolving round the sun.—Zodiacal parallel. See parallel.

zodiophilous (zō-di-ōf'i-lus), a. [zōdion, dim. of ζῷον, animal, + φιλεῖν, love.] In bot., animal-loving; applied to those flowers which from their structure are especially adapted for fertilization by insects: it is the converse of anthophilous, said of the insects concerned.

zoëa, zoëa (zō-ē-ä), n.; pl. zoëa, zoëæ (-ē), rarely zoëas (-äz). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal.] The name given by Böse (1802) to the larvæ of certain decapod crustaceans under the impression that they were adults constituting a distinct genus. The name is retained for the zoëa-stage, and for the animal itself in this stage. The zoëa is also called the copepod-stage, intervening in some crustaceans between the nauplius-stage and the schizopod-stage; in others, in which a nauplius-stage is apparently wanting, the zoëa passes into the megalopa-stage. Also zoëa, zwa.

zoëa-form (zō-ē-ä-fōrm), n. The zoëa or zoëa-stage of a crustacean.

zoëal, zoëal (zō-ē-äl), a. Of the nature of a zoëa; pertaining to a zoëa or to the zoëa-stage; zoëiform. Also zoëal.

zoëa-stage (zō-ē-ä-stāj), n. That early stage of certain crustaceans which is a zoëa. In this stage of development the cephalothorax is relatively stout and usually spined, with conspicuous eyes, and long fringed antennæ and mouth-parts serving as swimming-organs; the thoracic legs are undeveloped; and the abdomen is long and slender and with or without appendages. This stage usually passes into that of the megalopa.

zoëiform, zoëiform (zō-ē-fōrm), a. [zōëa, q. v., + L. forma, form.] Having the form of a zoëa; being or resembling a zoëa.

zoëpraxiscope (zō-ē-prak'si-skōp), n. Same as zoëpraxiscope.

zoëther (zō-ē-thēr), n. [zōë, life, + E. (c)ther.] A supposed substance which manifests the phenomena of animal magnetism and the like: same as protyle.

zoëtheric (zō-ē-thēr'ik), a. [zoëther + -ic.] Having the character of zoëther; relating to zoëther in any way.

zoëtic (zō-ēt'ik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῷή, life, + -tic.] Pertaining to life; vital.

Zoëa-stage of Shore-crab (Carcinus maenas).

zoëtrope (zō-ē-trōp), n. [zōë, life, + τροπος, a turning.] An optical instrument which exhibits its pictures as if alive and in action, depending, like the thaumatrope, the phenakistoscope, etc., on the persistence of vision. It consists of a cylinder open at the top, with a series of slits in its circumference. A series of pictures representing the different attitudes successively assumed by an object in performing any act from its beginning to its close, as by a horseman in leaping a gate or an acrobat in performing a somersault, is arranged along the interior circumference. The instrument is then set in rapid motion, and the person applying his eye to the slits sees through them the figure appearing as if endowed with life and activity and performing the act intended. Compare zoëgroscope and zoëpraxiscope. Also zoëtrope and wheel of life.

zoëtropic (zō-ē-trōp'ik), a. [zoëtrope + -ic.] Pertaining to or resembling the zoëtrope; adapted to or shown by the zoëtrope.

zoiatria (zō-i-at'ri-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, an animal, + ιατρικα, healing, < ιατρεύω, heal. < ιατρός, a physician; see iatrie.] Veterinary surgery.

zoic (zō'ik), a. [zōikos, of animals, < ζῷον, animal.] Of or pertaining to animals or living beings; relating to or characterized by animal life; marked by the presence of life.

Zoilean (zō-il'-ē-an), a. [L. Zoilus, < Gr. Ζώϊλος, Zoilus (see def.).] Characteristic of Zoilus, a Greek critic (about the fourth century B. C.), noted for his severe criticism of Homer; having the character of Zoilism.

Zoilism (zō-i-lizm), n. [Zoilus (see Zoilean) + -ism.] Criticism like that of Zoilus; illiberal or carping criticism; unjust censure.

Bring candid eyes unto the perusal of men's works, and let not Zoilism or detraction blast well-intended labours.

Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., ii. 2.

Zoilist (zō-i-list), n. [Zoilus (see Zoilean) + -ist.] An imitator of Zoilus; one who practises Zoilism; a carping critic.

Out, rhyme; take 't as you list:
A fido for the sour-brow'd Zoilist!

Marston, What You Will, ii. 1.

zoisite (zoi'sit), n. [Named by Werner in 1805 after Baron von Zois, from whom he received his specimen.] A mineral closely related to epidote, but orthorhombic in crystallization. It occurs in prismatic crystals, often deeply striated and rounded, also massive; it varies in color from white to yellow, greenish, and rose-red. Its composition is similar to that of epidote, except that it contains calcium and little iron. Thulite is a variety of a rose-red color, found in Norway. Also called saulspite.

zoism (zō'izm), n. [zōë, life, + -ism.] The doctrine that the phenomena of life depend upon a peculiar vital principle; any vitalistic theory. [A word current from about 1840 to 1850.]

zoist (zō'ist), n. [zōë, life, + -ist.] One who studies the phenomena of life from the standpoint of zoism; one who upholds the theory or doctrine of zoism. See zoism.

zoistic (zō-is'tik), a. [zoist + -ic.] 1. Pertaining to zoism or to the zoists: as, zoistic views. See zoism.—2. Pertaining to living organisms or to vitality; vitalistic; animal: as, zoistic magnetism (that is, animal magnetism). Scoresby.

Zolaism (zō-lä-izm), n. [Zola (see def.) + -ism.] The characteristic quality of the works of Emile Zola (born 1840), a French novelist characterized by an excessively "realistic" treatment of the grosser phases of life; coarse "realism" or "naturalism."

Set the maiden fancies wallowing in the troughs of Zolaism—
Forward, forward, ay and backward, downward too into the abyss.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall Sixty Years After.

Zöllner's lines. Parallel lines which seem not to be parallel by reason of oblique intersecting lines. Also called Zöllner's pattern.

zollverein (tsöl'fēr-in'), n. [G., < zoll (= E. toll), custom, + verein, union, < ver- (= E. for-) + ein (= E. one), one.] 1. A union of German states for the maintenance of a common tariff, or uniform rates of duty on imports from other countries, and of free trade among themselves.

... form a belt or zone. See zonate, zonular, and zonular.

... zonate is zonate and zonate. Nature, XL, 611.

zonate (zōn'at), a. [< NL. zonatus, < L. zona. 1. In bot., marked with zones or concentric bands of color. — 2. In zool., having zones of color or texture; belted, girdled, or ringed.]

zonda (zōn'dj), n. [Named from the village of Zonda.] A local foehn wind occurring at the eastern base of the Andes, in the vicinity of San Juan, Argentine Republic. It is a hot dry wind blowing down from the Cordillera and carrying with it dust and sand. It may occur at any season, but is especially frequent during July and August (mid-summer), when its high temperature and parching effects are especially noticeable. The name is also applied to a hot dry north wind occurring on the Argentine plains during the summer, and reported especially from the vicinity of Mendoza. This is essentially a desert wind, charged with dust and oppressive and sulcating in its effects.

zone (zōn), v. [< F. zone, < Sp. It. zona, < L. zona, < Gr. ζώνη, a girdle, belt, one of the zones of the sphere, < ζώνω, gird.] 1. A girdle or belt worn as an article of dress. [Now only poetical.]

Grimatto, in green, with a zone of gold about her waist. B. Jonson, Masque of Beauty.

With a side White as Hebe's, when her zone Slit its golden clasp, and down Fell her kirtle to her feet. Keats, Fancy.

2. A belt or band round anything, as a stripe of different color or substance round an object; figuratively, any circumscribing or surrounding line, real or imaginary; a circuitous line, path, or course; an inclosing circle.

That milky way, Which mightly, as a circling zone, thou seest Powder'd with stars. Milton, P. L., vii, 580. And four great zones of sculpture, set betwixt With many a mystic symbol, gird the hall. Pennycuik, Holy Grail.

Very frequently the colors form stripes or zones in the stone [Egyptian jasper], which are probably the result of decomposition of the upper surface.

E. W. Streeter, Precious Stones, p. 201. 3. Specifically, in geog., one of five arbitrary divisions of the earth's surface, bounded by lines parallel to the equator, each named according to its prevailing temperature; a climatic belt. These climatic zones are (a) the tropical zone, extending from tropic to tropic, or 23° north and 23° south of the equator; (b) the temperate zone, extending from the tropics to the polar circles, that is, from the parallel of 23° north or south to that of 66° north or south, and therefore called the north temperate and south temperate zones; and (c) two frigid zones, extending from the polar circles to the north and south poles respectively.

4. Any continuous tract or belt differing in character from adjoining tracts; a definite area or region within which some distinguishing circumstances exist or are established: as, the zones of natural history, distinguished by special forms of vegetable or animal life; a zone of free trade; a free zone on the border of a country or between adjoining states. Naturalists formerly divided the seabottom into five zones in accordance with the depth of water covering each, which was supposed to determine its fauna and flora. They were called respectively littoral, circum-littoral, medial, inframedial, and abysal. Later researches have proved that the assumed facts were to a great extent erroneous, organisms supposed to be confined to the littoral zone having been found at the greatest depths. In geology zone has nearly the same meaning as horizon. A stratum, or a group of strata, may be characterized by the presence of a certain assemblage of fossils, or by one particular fossil; in such cases the most abundant or typical fossil may give a name to the subdivision in which it occurs, which will then be designated as the zone of that particular species. Thus, the Lower and the Middle Lias have together been divided into twelve zones, each characterized by the presence of a certain species of ammonite: as, the "zone of the Arctites (Ammonites) varicosatus," etc.

They [the people of Savoy] would . . . lose their commercial zone or free frontier with Switzerland. C. K. Adams, Democracy and Monarchy, ix. The zone of youthful fancy . . . is now well passed; the zone of cultured imagination is still beyond us. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 15.

How vast must have been that earlier period wherein were deposited those fine alternations of lime and clay which form hills, such as Mont Perrier, several hundred feet in height, divisible into distinct zones, each characterized by peculiar assemblages of fossils. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, v.

Attacks of a spasmodic or of a lethargic nature in hysterical patients can often be excited by touching or pressing upon certain spots or zones on the surface of the body. Lancet, 1886, II, 1243.

5. In math., a part of the surface of a sphere included between two parallel planes. — 6. In crystal., a series of planes having their lines of intersection parallel. — Annual zone. Same as annual, which see under ring. — Bathymetric zone. See bathymetric. — Cervical zone, that part of the pregnant uterus, embracing about the lower fourth, within which attachment of the placenta is dangerous, as liable to cause alarming hemorrhage during childbirth. The centric attachment of the placenta in this zone constitutes placenta previa (which see, under placenta). — Ciliary zone, in anat., see ciliary. — Coralline zone. See coralline. — Epileptic zone, an area of the skin covering the lower part of the face and the neck, irritation of which will excite an epileptic paroxysm. Brown-Séquard found that section of the spinal cord in the lumbar region in animals, usually guinea-pigs, was followed by epilepsy, and that the progeny of animals so treated had these epileptic zones. — Epileptogenic or epileptogenic zone. Same as epileptic zone. — Hyperesthetic zone, a hyper-sensitive portion of the integument, sometimes found, in cases of spinal paralysis, at the border of the affected part. — Hypnogenic zone, a place or region on the surface of the body stimulation or irritation of which tends to induce hypnotism. [Recent.]

Spots which have been described by Pitres as hypnogenic zones. Björnstrom, Hypnotism (trans.) p. 18.

Hystero-genic zone, a part of the surface of the body pressure upon which will excite a paroxysm in cases of hystero-epilepsy. — Intermediary zone of the stomach, that part of the wall of the stomach, near the pylorus, where the peptic glands begin to disappear. — Isothermal zones. See isothermal. — Lissauer's zone. Same as Lissauer's tract (which see, under tract). — Marginal zone, the border where the synovial membrane is gradually converted into articular cartilage. — Neutral, pectinate, pellucid, primordial zones. See the adjectives. — Posterior marginal zone. Same as Lissauer's tract (which see, under tract). — Three-mile zone. See mile. — Zone of defense, in fort., the belt of territory around a fortification which falls under the effective fire of the besieged. — Zone of Haller. Same as zone of Zinn. — Zone of Lissauer. Same as Lissauer's tract. See tract. — Zone of operations (milit.), the region containing the lines of operations of an army, extending from the base of operations to the objective point. See strategy. — Zone of vegetation, a belt of characteristic vegetable growth following a particular line of altitude on mountain sides. — Zone of Zinn. Same as zone of Zinn. See zone.

zone (zōn), v.; pret. and pp. zoned, ppr. zoning. [< zone, n.] 1. trans. To encircle with or as if with a zone; bring within a zone, or divide into zones or belts, in any sense.

I could hear he loved Some fair immortal, and that his embrace Had zoned her through the night. Keats, Endymion, ii.

II. intrans. To be formed into zones.

What Mr. Lockyer had called the zoning of colour in the heavens. Nature, XXXVIII, 225.

zone-axis (zōn'ak'sis), n. In crystal., the line in which all the planes of a zone would intersect if they were supposed to pass through the same point.

zoned (zōnd), a. [< zone + -ed.] 1. Wearing a zone, as a woman. — 2. Having zones, or bands resembling zones; zonate.

zoneless (zōn'les), a. [< zone + -less.] Without a zone or girdle; ungirt; hence, loosely robed.

That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist. Couper, Task, iii, 52.

zonik (zō'n'ik), n. [< zone + -ic.] A girdle; a zone; a belt. [Rare.]

I know that the place where I was bred stands upon a zone of coal. Smollett, Travels, iv. (Davies.)

zoniferous (zō-nif'ē-rus), a. [< L. zona, zone, + ferre = E. bear.] Having or bearing a zone; zoned.

Zonites (zō-nī'tēz), n. [NL. (Montfort, 1810), < Gr. ζώνη, girded, < ζώνω, girdle; see zone.] In conch., a genus of pulmonate gastropods, referred to the family Helicidae, or to the Limacidae, or to the Vitrinidae, and giving name to the Zonitinae. The species are numerous, as Z. cellaria (see cellaria). Z. nitida is a very small species of the United States; Z. umbilicata is known as the open snail. The genus in a broad sense includes species of Hyalina and related forms; but it is also restricted to about a dozen species of the Mediterranean region, as Z. algeris.

Zonitidae (zō-nit'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonites + -idae.] A family of terrestrial gastropods, typified by the genus Zonites; same as Vitrinidae. Trans. New Zealand Inst., 1883.

Zonitinae (zō-ni-ti-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonites + -inae.] A subfamily of Vitrinidae or another family, typified by the genus Zonites, and including forms with a helicoid shell (into which the animal can completely withdraw) and with lateral bicuspid and marginal acute teeth.

Zonitis (zō-ni'tis), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1775), < Gr. ζώνη, fem. of ζώνω; see Zonites.] A genus of blister-beetles, of the family Cantharidae, of wide distribution and comprising about 40 species, of which 6 are North American. They are very variable in color and size, but are distinguished by having the outer lobe of the maxilla not prolonged.

zonochlorite (zō-nō-klo'rīt), n. [< Gr. ζώνω, girdle, + χλωρός, greenish-yellow, + -ite.] A zeolitic mineral, perhaps related to thomsonite, occurring in massive form in cavities in amygdaloid; it often shows bands of different colors.

zonociliate (zō-nō-sil'i-āt), a. [< L. zona, zone, + NL. ciliatus, ciliate.] Zoned with a circlet of cilia; encircled with cilia, as a trochosphere or telotrocha. See these words, and cut under veliger.

The fertilized egg of the Phylactodema does not give rise to a zonociliate larva. Encyc. Brit., XIX, 437.

zonoid (zō'noid), a. [< Gr. Zonoidon, like a girdle, < Zōnē, girdle, + oidēs, form.] Like a zone; pertaining to zones; zonular. [Rare.]

zonoplacental (zō'nō-plā-sen'tal), a. [< L. zona, girdle, + NL. placenta + -al.] In mammals, having a zonary deciduate placenta; of or pertaining to the Zonoplacentalia.

Zonoplacentalia (zō'nō-plas-en-tā'li-ā), n. pl. [NL.: see zonoplacental.] Those deciduate mammals in which the placenta is zonary, as contrasted with Discoplacentalia; the Zonaria. The carnivores, the elephant, and the hyrax are examples.

Zonotrichia (zō'nō-trik'i-ā), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1831), < Gr. Zōnē, girdle, + trichē (τρίχης), hair.] A genus of large and handsome American finches, of the family Fringillidae; the crown-sparrows. The white-crowned is Z. leucopygia, abundant in many parts of North America. More numerous and familiar is the white-throated, or peabody-bird, Z. albicollis, whose white throat is sharply contrasted with the dark ash of the breast. In the adult the head is striped with black and white, there is a distinct yellow spot before each eye, and the edge of the wing is yellow. The length is 6½ inches, the extent 9½. This sparrow abounds in shrubbery of the eastern half of North America, and has a limpid pleasing song, some notes of which are rendered in the word peabody. Z. querula is Harris's finch, of the Missouri and Mississippi region; the male when adult has nearly the whole head hooded with jet-black. Z. coronata, of the Pacific slope, is the golden-crowned.

White-throated Sparrow, or Peabody-bird (Zonotrichia albicollis)

zonula (zō'nū-lā), n.; pl. zonulae (-lō). [NL.: see zonule.] In anat. and zool., a small zone, belt, or ring; a zonule.—Zonula ciliaris. Same as zonule of Zinn.—Zonula of Zinn. Same as zonule of Zinn.

zonular (zō'nū-lār), a. [< zonule + -ar.] 1. Of or pertaining to a zone or zonule; zonary; zoned.—2. In zool., specifically, diffuse; applied to a diffuse form of placenta. See zonary.

The zonular type of a placenta.

Dana.

Zonular cataract, a form of cataract, occurring usually in young children, in which the opacity is situated between the cortex and the nucleus of the lens.

zonule (zō'nūl), n. [< L. zonula, dim. of zona, girdle; see zone.] A little zone, belt, or band; a zonula.—Zonule of Zinn, the suspensory ligament of the crystalline lens of the eye. See under suspensory.

zonulet (zō'nū-let), n. [< zonule + -et.] A little zone or girdle.

That riband 'bout my Julia's waste,
... that zonulet of love.

Herrick, Upon Julia's Riband.

zonure (zō'nūr), n. [< NL. Zonurus.] Any lizard of the genus Zonurus in a broad sense, or of the family Zonuridae: as, the rough-tailed zonure, Zonurus cordylus.

Zonuridae (zō'nū-ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonurus + -idēs.] A South African and Madagascar family of agamid eriglossate lacertilians, with cruciform interclavicles, short, simple tongue, and roofed-over supratemporal fossæ, typified by the genus Zonurus. The family was formerly much more loosely characterized, and then contained various forms from different parts of the world, which have since been separated as types of other families.

Zonurinae (zō'nū-rī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonurus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Zonuridae, containing normally lacertiform species with well-developed limbs, and including the greater part of the family: distinguished from Chamaesaurinae.

Zonurus (zō'nū-rus), n. [NL. (Merrem), < Gr. Zōnē, a belt, zone, + ourā, tail.] The typical Zonure (Zonurus giganteus).

genus of Zonuridae: so named from the rings of spiny scales on the tail, as of Z. giganteus.

Zoo (zō), n. [The first three letters of zoölogical, taken as forming one syllable.] With the definite article, the Zoölogical Gardens in London: also used of any similar collection of animals. [From a mere vulgarism, this corruption has passed into wide colloquial use.]

zoāmylin (zō-ō-am'i-lin), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + E. amylin.] Same as glycogen.

zoöbiontism (zō-ō-bi'ō-tizm), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + biōs, life, + -tēs + -ism.] Same as biotics.

zoöblast (zō'ō-blast), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + βλαστός, germ.] An animal cell; a bioplast (which see).

zoöcarp (zō'ō-kārp), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + καρπός, fruit.] Same as zoöspore.

zoöcaulon (zō-ō-kā-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. Zōon, animal, + καυλός, stem, stalk; see caul, caulis.]

The erect branching tentaculiferous colony-stock of some infusorians, as of the genus Dendrosoma. W. S. Kent.

zoöchemical (zō-ō-kem'i-kal), a. [< zoöchem-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoöchemistry.

zoöchemistry (zō-ō-kem'is-tri), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + E. chemistry.] Animal chemistry; the chemistry of the constituents of the animal body.

zoöchemy (zō'ō-kem-i), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + *E. *chemy* (F. chimie); see alchemy.] Same as zoöchemistry. Darlington.

zoöchlorella (zō'ō-klō-rel'ā), n.; pl. zoöchlorellæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. Zōon, animal, + χλωρός, pale-green, + dim. -ella.] One of the green pigmentary particles, or minute corpuscles of green coloring matter, which are found in various low invertebrates, as the hydras among polyps and the stentors among infusorians. Compare zoöxanthella.

zoöcyst (zō'ō-sist), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + κύστις, bladder.] A cyst, formed by various protozoans and protophytes, whose contents break up into many germinal granules or spores; a kind of sporocyst.

zoöcystic (zō-ō-sis'tik), a. [< zoöcyst + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a zoöcyst.

zoöcytial (zō-ō-sit'i-al), a. [< zoöcytium + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a zoöcytium.

zoöcytium (zō-ō-sit'i-um), n.; pl. zoöcytia (-ā). [NL., < Gr. Zōon, animal, + κύτος, cavity.] The common gelatinous matrix or support of certain compound or colonial infusorians, composed of a substance secreted by and containing the individual animalcules; an infusorial synectium; a zoöthecium. Compare zoödendrium. See cut under Epistylis.

zoödendrial (zō-ō-den'dri-al), a. [< zoöden-dri-um + -al.] Of the nature of or pertaining to a zoödendrium.

zoödendrium (zō-ō-den'dri-um), n.; pl. zoöden-dria (-ā). [NL., < Gr. Zōon, animal, + δένδρον, tree.] The zoöcytium or zoöthecium of certain infusorians, which is much branched or of arborescent form. W. S. Kent. See cut under Epistylis.

zoödynamic (zō'ō-dī-nām'ik), a. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + δυναμικός, dynamic; see dynamic.] Of or pertaining to zoödynamics.

zoödynamics (zō'ō-dī-nām'iks), n. [Pl. of zoödynamic (see -ics).] The dynamics of the animal body; the science of the vital powers of animals; animal physiology, as a branch of biology: correlated with zoöphysics.

zoœa, zoœal, n. See zoœa, zoœal.

zoœcial (zō-ē'shi-āl), a. [< zoœci-um + -al.] Having the character of a zoœcium; of or pertaining to the zoœcia of polyzoans.

zoœcium (zō-ē'si-um), n.; pl. zoœcia (-i-ā). [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + oikia, house.] The ectocyst, or outer chitinous or calcified cell, in which a polypide of the Polyzoa is lodged, and into which a polypide can be retracted after protrusion; one of the cells of the conœcium, containing a polypide. It is the cuticle of the polypide itself, dense and tough, or hard, changing without solution of continuity into the soft delicate pellicle at the mouth of the animalcule. In the ectoproctous polyzoans it forms a case or shield into which the soft protrusible parts of the polypide can be withdrawn. See ectocyst, and cut under Planorbella.

zoœform, a. See zoœform.

zoöerythrin (zō'ō-e-rith'rin), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + ἐρυθρός, red, + -ine.] 1. A red coloring matter obtained from the plumage of the Musophagidæ or turakoes, giving a continuous spectrum. See turacin.—2. A kind of red pigment of the lipochrome series widely diffused in sponges, and regarded as having a respiratory function. W. J. Sollas, Encyc. Brit., XXII, 420.

Also zoöerythrin.

zoöfulvin (zō-ō-ful'vin), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + L. fulvus, tawny, + -in.] A yellow coloring matter obtained from the plumage of the Musophagidæ or turakoes, showing two absorptive bands not the same as those of turacin.

zoögamete (zō'ō-ga-mēt), n. [NL., < Gr. Zōon, animal, + γαμέτη, a wife, etc.] In bot., a motile gamete. Also planogamete.

zoögamous (zō-ō-g'a-mus), a. [< zoögam-y + -ous.] Of or pertaining to zoögamy; noting the pairing of animals or their sexual reproduction.

zoögamy (zō-ō-g'a-mi), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + γάμος, marriage.] The coupling, mating, or pairing of animals of opposite sexes for the purpose of reproduction or propagation of their kind; sexual reproduction; gamogenesis.

zoögen (zō'ō-jen), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + -γενής, producing; see -gen.] A glairy organic substance found on the surface of the thermal waters of Baden and elsewhere. Also called zoidin.

zoögenic (zō-ō-jen'ik), a. [< zoögen + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoögeny, or the origination of animals.

zoögeny (zō-ō-j'e-ni), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + -γένεα, production; see -geny.] The fact or the doctrine of the origination of living beings and the formation of their parts or organs. Also zoögonny.

zoögeog. An abbreviation, used in this work, of zoögeography.

zoögeographer (zō'ō-jē-ōg'ra-fēr), n. [< zoögeograph-y + -er.] One who studies the geographical distribution of animals, or is versed in zoögeography.

It is therefore . . . the business of the zoögeographer, who wishes to arrive at the truth, to ascertain what groups of animals are wanting in any particular locality. Encyc. Brit., III, 738.

zoögeographic (zō-ō-jē-ō-graf'ik), a. [< zoögeograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoögeography; faunistic; chorological.

zoögeographical (zō-ō-jē-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [< zoögeographic + -al.] Same as zoögeographic.

zoögeography (zō'ō-jē-ōg'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. Zōon, animal, + E. geography.] The science or the description of the distribution of animals on the surface of the globe; faunal or faunistic zoölogy; animal chorology: correlated with phytogeography.

This is an important branch of zoölogy, of much intrinsic interest in several respects, and of special significance in its bearing upon the questions of the origin of species and their modification under climatic and other physical conditions of environment. It has been much studied of late years, with the result of mapping the land-surface of the globe into several major and numerous minor areas, which can be bounded and graphically represented in colors with almost the precision attained in depicting civil or political boundaries. Zoögeography is related to paleontology as the distribution of animals in space is related to their succession in time; but the principles of zoögeography are of course as applicable to any former as to the present dispersion of species on the face of the globe. See province, 6, and region, 7.

zoöglœa (zō-ō-glō'ē), n.; pl. zoöglœæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. Zōon, animal, + γλοιός, a sticky substance.] 1. A peculiar colony of Schizomyces in which they form a jelly-like mass by the swelling up of their cell-membranes. It was formerly regarded as a distinct genus, but is now known to be a kind of resting-stage in which the various elements are glued together by their greatly swollen and diffident cell-walls becoming contiguous. It corresponds to the palmella stage of certain of the lower algae.

zoologically (zō-ō-loj'ī-kal-i), adv. In the manner of a zoologist; on the principles or according to the doctrines of zoology; from a zoological standpoint.
zoologist (zō-ol'ō-jist), n. [< zoology + -ist.] One who is versed in zoology; a biologist.
zoologize (zō-ol'ō-jiz), v. i. To study zoology practically.
zoology (zō-ol'ō-jī), n. [= F. zoologie = Sp. zoología = Pg. It. zoologia = G. zoologie, < NL. zoologia, < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + λόγος, < λῆγω, speak; see -logy.] 1. The science of animals; the natural history of the animal kingdom; the body of fact and doctrine derived from the scientific study of that series of organisms whose highest term is man: correlated with phytology (or botany) as one of the two main branches of biology. The connotation which the term has acquired during the last fifty years is very extensive, as a result of the application to zoological science of the most general laws and principles of biology. So far is zoology freed from the former restriction of its scope to the mere formalities of description, classification, and nomenclature (which constitute only systematic zoology) that it now includes the results of all the biological sciences in so far as these are applicable to the study of animal structure and function. Such are phylogeny, or the origination of species, genera, etc.; ontogeny, or the origination of the individual animal; embryology, or the prenatal life-history of organisms; paleontology, or paleozoology, the history of animals in geologic time; zoogeography, the history of animals as to their spatial relations; zootomy or zootomics, the comparative anatomy of animals; zoodynamics or biodynamics, animal physiology; zoochemistry, the chemistry of animal substances and tissues; zoopsychology, the science of animal instincts; zootechnics, bionomics, or thremmatology, which regards the relations of living animals to man; and various other cognate branches of the general science. The name zoology is an old one, and some of its branches have been cultivated from antiquity. One of the earliest classifications of animals in which a modern zoological group can be clearly recognized is that ascribed to Moses, which was based primarily upon certain hygienic and sacerdotal considerations: for the "clean" beasts that "cleave the hoof" are ruminants; certain "unclean" birds are carrion-feeding birds of prey, as the vulture; and the non-ruminant artiodactyls (swine) are characterized with special emphasis. The germ of modern zoology, as of other sciences, is commonly ascribed to Aristotle. Though he tabulated no scheme, his three treatises on zoological subjects include a classification which shows great discernment. He divided the animal kingdom into two main branches: (1) ἑναιμα, Enaima, or "blooded" animals in the four classes of mammals, birds, reptiles, and fishes—the Vertebrata; and nearly as they stand to-day; (2) ἀναιμα, Anaima, or "bloodless" animals, exactly the Invertebrata, of which he had four classes, his Μαλάκια being cephalopods; Μυακάκια, crustaceans; Ἔκτομα, insects (other arthropods than crustaceans); and Ὀστρακοδερμάτια, univalve and bivalve mollusks (together with sea-urchins). Pliny the naturalist was an industrious and indiscriminate compiler; and no name of special note in zoology appears again until the middle of the sixteenth century, when the almost simultaneous works of three authors securely founded the science and greatly enlarged its scope. Wotton (1552) followed Aristotle, but added to the system the Zoophyta (which long afterward became the Vermes of Linnaeus and the Radiata of Cuvier, and continue to be the "zooephytes" of the present day); Gesner and Belon published treatises in 1555; and in 1560 was started at Naples a society which had zoology among its objects, the Academia Secretorum Naturæ, suppressed by the church. The period between Gesner and Linnaeus is sometimes styled the "heroic age" of zoology. The advance upon Gesner was comparatively unmarked for a hundred years from his death in 1565; but the latter half of the seventeenth century witnessed great progress. The collection of animals from distant parts of the world increased; such anatomical examinations as had been practicable and had long been practised without the aid of the microscope were carried on with that instrument; and several still-existing societies were founded—the Academia Naturæ Curiosorum (in 1651), the Royal Society chartered in 1662, and soon afterward the Paris Academy, under Louis XIV. The immediate predecessor of Linnaeus in this period was John Ray (1628–1705), who fixed the word species in the sense it was to bear from his day to Darwin, and did more than any other person to make the "Systema Naturæ" of the Swedish naturalist possible. This work passed through twelve editions (1735–68) in the lifetime of its author; the present binomial system of nomenclature was first applied consistently to zoology in the tenth edition (1759). Linnaeus also gave fixity to certain graded groups above the species—namely, the genus, order, and class of the "Regnum Animale"—and he recognized the variety below the species. The classes in 766weretwelve: Mammalia, with orders, Feres, Carnives, Ambphibia, Pisces, Ores, Insecta, Vermines, Arachnides, Scorpiones, Serpentes, Reptilia, Avium, Pterodactyli. The Linnean diagnoses were always crisp and sententious, if not always correct; and, faulty or inadequate as any of them may now appear to be, the practical convenience of this machinery of classification and nomenclature is undeniable. Though the notion of the fixity of species and their groups as special creations, to which this system gave rise, is now known to be radically fallacious, the Linnean classification acquired almost the character of dogma, such as had many centuries before attached to the writings of Aristotle and to the Mosaic traditions. This system may be said to have culminated with the close of the eighteenth century; and the early years of the nineteenth wrought important changes, both in form and substance, notably at the hands of Lamarck and Cuvier. Lamarck was the pivot upon which zoology turned from Linnaeus to Darwin. His "Zoological Philosophy" of 1809 is separated by half-a-century to a year from the "Systema Naturæ" of 1758, and by exactly a half-century from Darwin's "Origin of Species" which was first published in November, 1859. Lamarckianism brought up the whole subject of modern

II. n. In biol., something like an animal; that which is of the nature of an animal, yet is not an animal in an ordinary sense, and is not regarded as an animal in a strict sense; one of the various forms of matter, very distinct from the animal, and is not the product of any organism, whether of animal, vegetable, or mineral nature, which is capable of spontaneous movements, and hence may have an origin more or less apart from or independent of the animal kingdom.

evolution as opposed to special creation, and the variability of organisms by their aptency, as opposed to their fixity in character. Lamarck recognized the two Aristotelian main branches as Vertebrata and Invertebrata, the former with 4, the latter with 12 classes, and both with many ordinal and lower groups. Cuvier was profoundly versed in comparative anatomy, gave also special prominence to paleontology, and reached the conclusion (1812) that all animals are modeled upon four types, for which he adopted the names Vertebrata, with 4 classes, Mollusca, 6 classes; Articulata, 4 classes; Radiata, 5 classes—each with more or fewer orders. Except the first of these (borrowed from Lamarck and so from Aristotle), none of these "types" are found to hold; and few of the classes or orders are now accepted as framed by Cuvier, whose views and methods in the main were upheld in England by Owen. Cuvier's system was completed in 1829. Among the last notable views of classification before the appearance of Darwinism are those of Leuckart (1848), giving 5 types and 14 classes of invertebrates (without the protozoans); of H. Milne-Edwards (1855); and of L. Agassiz (1859). The period between Lamarck and Darwin was one of extraordinary activity in all branches of zoological investigation, involving the accumulation of a wealth of material, the description of thousands of new genera and species, and the multiplication of distinctions founded upon little difference; but philosophical generalizations did not keep pace with the elaboration of analytical details. Zoological systems in various departments became almost as numerous as the specialists engaged; and the subject acquired a huge literature, descriptive, iconographic, and classificatory, as well as controversial. This aspect of zoology has continued during the past thirty years or so (1859-91); but the real history of the zoology of this period is the history of Darwinian evolution, or the application of general principles of individual development (ontogeny) to the solution of broader biological problems (phylogeny)—the development of the theory of evolution being itself an illustration of its own underlying principle.

2. Zoögraphy; the written description of animals; a treatise on animals, especially a systematic treatise, or zoölogical system. Several of the main classificatory divisions of the animal kingdom represent formally named departments of systematic zoology. Such are mammalogy or mastology or therology, the formal science of mammals; ornithology, of birds; herpetology, of reptiles, including amphibians; ichthyology, of fishes in their several classes; conchology or malacology, of mollusks; carcinology or crustaceology, of crustaceans; entomology, of insects (more extensive than all the others combined); heliomithology, of worms; and zoophytology, of zoöphytes. From some of these again subdivisions are formed, in consequence either of the intrinsic importance of certain of their subjects or of the special activity of investigation of these subjects—as, for example, anthropology (including chirography and sociology), or the particular study of man from a biological standpoint; cetology, the study of whales as differing much from ordinary mammals; selachology, of one of the classes of fishes; ascidiology, of the connecting links between invertebrates and ordinary vertebrates; and especially of bacteriology, the lately created science of microbes or micro-organisms, which probably of all the departments of zoology has the most direct and important bearing upon human welfare and happiness.

zoömancy (zō-ō-man-si), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + μαντῖα, divination.] The pretended art of divination from observation of animals, or of their actions under given circumstances.

zoömantic (zō-ō-man'tik), a. [zoömancy (-mant-) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoömancy.

zoömechanics (zō-ō-mē-kan'iks), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + E. mechanics.] Same as zoidynamics.

zoömelanin (zō-ō-mel'a-nin), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + μελαν (melan), black, + -in.] A black pigment derived from the feathers of some birds.

zoömetric (zō-ō-met'rik), a. [zoömetr-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoömetry.

zoömetry (zō-ō-mē'tri), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + μετρία, metria, measure.] Measurement of the proportionate lengths or sizes of the parts of animals: correlated with anthropometry.

zoömorphic (zō-ō-mōr'fik), a. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + μορφή, form.] 1. Representative of animals, or of their characteristic forms, as a work of art; of or pertaining to zoömorphism: correlated with anthropomorphic.—2. Especially, representing or symbolizing the conception of a god under the form of an animal whose characteristic traits or habits suggest the idea attached to the god. The most thoroughly zoömorphic religion was probably that of the ancient Egyptians, resulting in a complex system of zoölatry, many elements of which were appropriated and adapted by the Greeks and Romans.

Oghams, as is well known, occur on some of the crosses bearing the interlaced ornamentation and zoomorphic designs found on the Manx crosses.

N. and Q., 7th ser., II, 240.

Under Dynasty XII, the gods that had previously been represented in art as beasts appear in their later shapes, often half anthropomorphic half zoomorphic, dog-headed, cat-headed, hawk-headed, bull-headed men and women.

Nineteenth Century, XX, 428.

zoömorphism (zō-ō-mōr'fiz'm), n. [zoömorphic + -ism.] 1. The character of being zoömorphic; zoömorphic state or condition; representation or exhibition of animal forms as distinguished from the human form; especially, the characterization or symbolization of a god in animal form. Compare anthropomorphism.—2. The conception or representation of men or supernatural beings under the form of animals, or of men or gods transformed into beasts; the attribution of human or divine qualities to beings of animal form; worship of the images of animals; zoötheism.

Zoomorphism is much more absurd than Anthropomorphism after all. Surely the rational mode is to employ the highest conceptions you can, while freely acknowledging their utter inadequacy.

Miart, Nature and Thought, p. 205.

zoömorphy (zō-ō-mōr-fi), n. [zoömorphic + -y.] Same as zoömorphism.

zoön (zō'on), n.; pl. zoa (zō-ā). [NL., < Gr. ζῶον, an animal; cf. ζωή, life; < ζῴων, ζῴω, Ionic ζῴω, live.] An animal form containing all the elements of a typical organism of the group to which it belongs; a morphological individual regarded as the whole product of an impregnated ovum, which may or may not be divided into persons or zooids without true generation. See zooid.

It is urged that whether the development of the fertilized germ be continuous or discontinuous is a matter of secondary importance; that the totality of living tissue to which the fertilized germ gives rise in any one case, is the equivalent of the totality to which it gives rise in any other case, and that we must recognize this equivalence, whether such totality of living tissue takes a concrete or a discrete arrangement. In pursuance of this view a zoological individual is constituted either by any such single animal as a mammal or bird, which may properly claim the title of a zoön, or by any such group of animals as the numerous Medusæ that have been developed from the same egg, which are to be severally distinguished as zooids.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 73.

Zoa impersonalia, organisms resulting from the coalescence or concrescence of zoons, as of many sponges, which thus lose their "personality."

The remarkable cases [among sponges] of zoa impersonalia, or what we should call degraded colonies.

A. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist. 1884, p. 99.

zoönal (zō-ō-nal), a. [Irreg. < zoön + -al.] Having the character of a zoön; of or pertaining to zoa.

zoönerithrin (zō-on-e-rith'rin), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + ερῖθρος, red, + -in.] Same as zoöerythrin. Also zoönerithrine.

zoönic (zō-on'ik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + -ic.] Relating to animals; obtained or derived from animal substance: as, zoönic acid.—Zoönic acid, a name given by Berthollet to acetic acid in combination with animal matter, obtained by distilling animal matter.

zoönite (zō-ō-nit), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + -ite.] 1. One of the rings, segments, or somites of which the body of a worm, crustacean, insect, vertebrate, or other segmented or articulated animal is composed; a zonule; a metamere or an arthromere of an articulated invertebrate; a diarthromere of a vertebrate: used generically of any segment, to which special names are given in special cases.—2. Same as zoöid: a mistaken use of the word. Eng. Cyclop. (Zool.), IV, 561. (Encyc. Dict.)

zoönitic (zō-ō-nit'ik), a. [zoönite + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a zoönite; somitic.

zoönomia (zō-ō-nō-mi-ä), n. [NL. (the title of a celebrated treatise by Dr. Erasmus Darwin): see zoönomy.] Same as zoönomy.

zoönomie (zō-ō-nō-mi-ä), a. [zoönomy + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoönomy.

zoönomist (zō-ō-nō-mist), n. [zoönom-y + -ist.] One who is versed in zoönomy; a biologist, in a broad sense.

zoönomy (zō-on'ō-mi), n. [NL. zoönomia, < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + νόμος, law.] The laws of animal life collectively considered; the science which treats of the causes and relations of the phenomena of living animals; the vital economy of animals; animal physiology.

zoönosis (zō-on'ō-sis), n.; pl. zoönoses (-sēz). [NL., < Gr. ζῶον, animal, + νόσος, disease.] A disease communicated to man from the lower animals. Hydrophobia and glanders are examples of zoönoses.

zoönosology (zō-ō-nō-sol'ō-ji), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + E. nosology.] The classification of diseases affecting the lower animals; a system of zoöpathology; zoöpathy.

zoöparasite (zō-ō-par'a-sit), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + παράσιτος, parasite.] A parasitic animal.

zoöpathology (zō-ō-pā-thol'ō-ji), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + E. pathology.] The study of disease in animals; veterinary pathology.

zoöpathy (zō-ō-pā-thi), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + πάθος, suffering.] Animal pathology; the science of the diseases of animals, excepting man. See zoötherapy.

Zoöphaga (zō-ō-fā-gā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of zoöphagus: see zoöphagous.] 1. [l. c.] Flesh-eating or carnivorous animals collectively considered: a term of no exact classificatory meaning.—2. The carnivorous and insectivorous marsupials, as collectively distinguished from the herbivorous marsupials, or Botanophaga. The opossum is an example.—3. A division of gastropods including carnivorous forms. Lamarck, 1822.

zoöphagan (zō-ō-fā-gān), n. A carnivorous animal; a sarcophagan; especially, a member of the Zoöphaga, 2.

zoöphagous (zō-ō-fā-gus), a. [NL. zoöphagus, Gr. ζῳοφάγος, living on animal food, < ζῶον, animal, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Devouring animals; sarcophagous; carnivorous: opposed to phytophagous. Specifically applied by Blyth, in editing Cuvier, to one of two primary types of placental Mammalia, including man, Quadrumania, Carnivora, and Celacea; the last constituting the order Isodontia, the first three the order Tyodontia.

zoöphilist (zō-ō-fil-ist), n. [zoöphil-y + -ist.] A lover of animals or living creatures; one whose sympathy embraces all living creation.

Our philosopher and zoöphilist . . . advised those who consulted him as to the best manner of killing and destroying rats. Southey, The Doctor, cxcviii. (Davies.)

The zoöphilists vowed their determination to force through Parliament a prohibitory act.

N. A. Rev., CXL, 207.

zoöphil-y (zō-ō-fil-i), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + φιλία, love, < φιλεῖν, love.] A love of animals; a sympathy or tender care for living creatures which prevents all unnecessary acts of cruelty or destruction. Cornhill Mag.

zoöphoric (zō-ō-for'ik), a. [zoöphor-us + -ic.] Bearing a living being, or a figure or figures of one or more men or animals: as, a zoöphoric column.

zoöphorus (zō-ō-fō-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῳοφόρος, a frieze bearing the figures of living beings, < ζῶον, animal, + -φορος, carrying = E. bear.] In anc. arch., a continuous frieze, unbroken by triglyphs, carved in relief with figures of men and animals, as the Panathenaic frieze of the Parthenon, or the frieze of Phigaleia. Also zophorus. See cuts under Doric and Hellenic.

zoöphysics (zō-ō-fiz'iks), n. [Gr. ζῶον, animal, + φυσικά, physics.] The study of the physical structure of animals; comparative anatomy as a branch of zoölogy: correlated with zoöynamics, or animal physiology.

Zoo-Dynamics, Zoo-Physics, Zoo-Chemistry.—The pursuit of the learned physician—atomy and physiology: exemplified by Harvey, Haller, Hunter, Johann Muller. Encyc. Brit., XXIV, 803.

Zoöphyta (zō-ō-fī-tā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of zoöphyton: see zoöphyte.] The alternative name of the Cuvierian Radiata; the Phytozoa; the animal-plants, or plant-like animals. In later systems, especially following the classification of Cuvier, the name has been much used for a large artificial and heterogeneous assemblage of the lower invertebrates, many of which, like the corallines, have a plant-like habit, and branch from a fixed base. It thus covers, &c. has covered, all the true coelenterates (actinozoans, hydrozoans, and ctenophorans), all the echinoderms (starfishes, sea-urchins, holothurians, and crinoids), the polyzoans, the sponges, some of the worms which used to be classed as radiates, and all the infusorians and other protozoans known, having thus no better standing than "the radiate mob" of Cuvier. (See Radiata, 1.) In some of its various restricted applications, however, it has excluded certain forms that obviously belonged elsewhere, and the tendency has been to adapt the name to the coelenterates, with or without the sponges. Quite recently the proposition has been made, and by some accepted, to use the name in this strict sense, and instead of Coelentera or Coelenterata; in which case it would cover the Actinozoa, Hydrozoa, Ctenophora, and Spongiae. The New Latin form of the term is attributed to Wotton (1492-1555), who in his "De Differentiis Animalium" (Paris, 1552) included under this name practically its present content: namely, holothurians, starfishes, jellyfishes, sea-anemones, and sponges.

zoöphyte (zō-ō-fīt), n. [NL. zoöphyton, < Gr. ζῳοφύτον (Aristotle), lit. 'animal-plant,' < ζῶον, animal, + φυτόν, plant.] A member of the Zoöphyta, in any sense; a radiate; a phytozoan.

zoöphyte (zō-ōf'it), n. [Gr. ζῷον, animal, + φυτὸν, plant.] A plant which issues from the sporocyst of a zoöphyte, or a swarm-spore. Can-

Zoospore (zō-spōr'e-er), n. [NL. (Thucydides).] A somewhat doubtful class of zoöphyte or zoöphyte in which the zoöphyte is by means of zoospores. Conjugation is not observed in the zoospores, but without clear evidence of the zoospores. The zoospore includes the zoöphyte of the Thucydides of Harvey. See Thucydides.

zoosporic (zō-spōr'ik), a. [zoospore + -ic.] Of the nature of a zoöspore; pertaining to zoöspores.

zoösporiferous (zō-ō-spō-rif'e-rus), a. [zoöspore + -iferous = E. bear.] In bot., bearing or producing zoöspores.

zoötaxy (zō-ō-tak-si), n. [Gr. ζῷον, animal, + τάξις, arrangement.] The science of the classification of animals; systematic zoology. Compare phylogeny.

zoötechnic (zō-ō-tek'nik), a. and n. [zoötechnic + -ic.] I. a. Of or pertaining to zoötechny. II. n. Zoötechny.

zoötechnics (zō-ō-tek'niks), n. Same as zoötechny.

zoötechny (zō-ō-tek-ni), n. [NL. zoötechnia, < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + τεχνή, art.] Domestication of animals; the breeding and keeping of animals in domestication or captivity. See acclimatization.

zoötheca (zō-ō-thē'ka), n. [zoötheca (-sē).] [NL. < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + θῆκη, case.] The case or sheath of a zoöspore; a cell containing a spermatozoöid.

zoöthecal (zō-ō-thē'kal), a. [zoötheca + -al.] Of the nature of or forming a zoötheca.

zoöthecial (zō-ō-thē'sial), a. [zoöthecium + -al.] Of or pertaining to a zoöthecium.

zoöthecium (zō-ō-thē'sium), n. [zoöthecia (-sia).] [NL. < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + θῆκη, case, dim. of θῆκη, case, chest: see zoötheca.] A compound tubular investment or domiciliary sheath in which certain infusorians are incased. Compare zoöcytion, zoöndrium.

For these aggregations of ordinary simple lorice the distinctive title of zoöthecia has been adopted. W. S. Kent, Manual of Infusoria, p. 61.

zoötheism (zō-ō-thē-izm), n. [Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. theism.] The attribution of deity to an animal; the treatment of animals or animal forms as objects of worship. See zoölatry and zoömorphism, 2.

In the stage of barbarism all the phenomena of nature are attributed to the animals by which man is surrounded, or rather to the ancestral types of these animals, which are worshipped. This is the religion of zoötheism. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXVI, 63.

zoötheistic (zō-ō-thē-is'tik), a. Of or pertaining to zoötheism; relating to the worship of animals; zoölatrous. See zoömorphic, 2.

The prophets tried to pull the Israelites too rapidly through the zoötheistic and physiologic stages into monotheism. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXVI, 208.

zoötherapy (zō-ō-ther'a-pi), n. [Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. therapy.] The treatment of disease in the lower animals; veterinary therapeutics.

Zoötoca (zō-ō-tō'ka), n. [NL. (Wagler), < Gr. ζῷον, viviparous, < ζῷον, animal, + τέκεν, τέκεν, being forth.] A genus of ovoviviparous lizards, of the family Lacertidae, very near Lacerta proper. There are about 8 species, chiefly of southern Europe and of Africa, as the well known Z. ciliaris.

Zoötoca (zō-ō-tō'ka), n. [NL. neut. pl.: see Zoötoca.] Same as Vivipara. In its application to mammals, the term is traceable to Aristotle.

zoötcology (zō-ō-tō-kol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. ζῷον, viviparous, + -λογία, < λόγος, speak: see -ology.] The biology of animals. See the quotation. [Rare.]

In field talks we are all wrong in using the term biology, and that we ought to employ another; only he is not quite sure about the propriety of that which he proposes as a substitute. It is a somewhat hard one. Zoötcology. Harden Amer. Addresses, p. 138.

zoötomie (zō-ō-tōm'ik), a. [zoötom-y + -ic.] Same as zootomical.

The zoötomie and embryological works of the last ten years. Nature, XXXVII, 70.

zoötomical (zō-ō-tōm'i-ka), a. [zoötomie + -ical.] Of or pertaining to zoötomie.

zoötomically (zō-ō-tōm'i-ka-i), adv. By means of or according to the principles of zoötomie.

Such being the position of apes as a whole, they are anatomically divisible into a number of more and more specialized groups. Encyc. Brit., II, 148.

zoötomist (zō-ō-tōm'ist), n. [zoötom-y + -ist.] One who dissects the bodies of animals; one who is versed in zoötomie; a comparative anatomist.

zoötomie (zō-ō-tōm'i), n. [Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -τομή, < τέκεν, cut.] The dissection or the anatomy of animals; specifically, the science, art, or practice of dissecting or anatomizing animals other than man: distinguished from human anatomy, androtomy, or anthropotomy; equivalent to comparative anatomy in a usual sense; correlated with phytotomy, or the dissection of plants. The zoötomie of living animals for other than surgical purposes is known as vivisection.

zoötrope (zō-ō-trōp), n. Same as zoötrope. An ingenious and effective application of the zoötrope, for the illustration of the relation between certain metric forms. Sci. Amer. Suppl., XXII, 3007.

zoötrophic (zō-ō-trof'ik), a. [Gr. ζῷον, animal, + τροφή, < τροφω, nourish.] Serving for the nourishment of animals; of or pertaining to animal alimentation.

zoöxanthella (zō-ō-zan-thel'ä), n.; pl. zoöxanthellæ (-ä). [NL. < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + xanthos, yellow, + -ella.] One of the yellow pigmentary particles, or minute corpuscles of yellow coloring matter, found in certain radiolarians.

zoozoo (zō-zō), n. [Imitative; cf. coo, croo.] The wood-pigeon. [Prov. Eng.]

zope (zōp), n. [G.] A certain fresh-water bream of Europe, Abramis ballerus.

Zopherus (zōf'e-rus), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1840), < Gr. ζῷον, dusky, < ζῷος, darkness, gloom.] A genus of tenebrionid beetles, remarkable for their large size, bold sculpture, and special coloration, the elytra having shining callosities. About 15 species are known, all from South America, Mexico, and the southwestern United States.

zopilote (zō-pi-lō'te), n. [Also tzopilote; < Mex. tzopilote.] One of the smaller American vultures or Cathartidae, as the turkey-buzzard or carrion-crow; a gallinazo; a urubu. See aura<sup>2</sup>, and cuts under Cathartes and urubu.

zopissa (zō-pis'sä), n. [NL. < Gr. ζῷον, pitch and wax from old ships, < ζῷ- (?) + πῖσσα, pitch: see pitch.] In med., a mixture of pitch and tar, impregnated with salt water, scraped from the sides of ships, formerly used in external applications as having resolute and desiccative properties. Simmmons.

zoppo (tsop'pō), a. [It.] In music, "limping," alternately with and without synecopation.—Ala zoppa, a duple or quadruple movement in which there is a synecopation in the midst of each measure, giving the metric figure zorgite (zōr'git), n. [Zorge (see def.) + -ite.] A metallic mineral consisting of the selenides of lead and copper, found at Zorge, in the Harz mountains.

zoril, zorille (zor'il), n. [F. zorille (Buffon), < Sp. zorilla, zorillo (< NL. zorilla), dim. of zorra, zorro, a fox.] 1. An African animal of the genus Zorilla.—2. Some Central or South American skunk; one of the Mephitinae, as the coneate; a zorrino. See cut under Conepatus.

Zorilla (zō-ril'ä), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray): see zoril.] 1. A genus of African skunk-like quadrupeds, representing the subfamily Zorillinae. The common zoril, or mariput, is Z. striata (or Ictonyx zorilla), a nocturnal, burrowing, carnivorous animal, capable of emitting a very fetid odor, like a skunk. It is as large as a small house-cat, and is entirely striped and spotted with black and white, thus closely resembling the small American skunk figured under Spilogale. The genus is also called Rhabdogale and Ictonyx. Its name Zorilla is quite recent; but zorilla as a specific New Latin name is more than a century old, having long designated a composite species in which the African zoril was confounded with some American skunks: whence also the two senses of zoril (which see).

Zorilla (zōr'i-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zorilla + -ina.] An African subfamily of Mustelidae, represented by the genus Zorilla: the zorils, or skunk-like quadrupeds of Africa. They are closely related to the American skunks, or Mephitis. See cut under Zorilla.

zorilline (zōr'i-līn), a. Resembling or related to animals of the genus Zorilla; pertaining to the Zorillinae.

Zoroaster (zō-rō-as'tēr), n. [NL. (Thomas, 1873), pun on Zoroaster (see Zoroastrian), involving NL. aster, starfish.] In zool., a genus of starfishes, giving name to the Zoroasteridae, and containing such species as Z. fulgens, of the North Atlantic.

Zoroasteridae (zō-rō-as'tēr'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zoroaster + -idae.] A family of starfishes, typified by the genus Zoroaster. It contains forms with very small body, very long arms, and quadriserial water-feet, attaining a diameter of 8 or 10 inches.

Zoroastrian (zō-rō-as'tri-an), a. and n. [< L. Zoroastres (> E. Zoroaster), the L. form of the Old Pers. name Zarathustra, + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Zoroaster, the founder of the Mazdayasnan or ancient Persian religion; relating to or connected with Zoroastrianism.

II. n. One of the followers of Zoroaster, now represented by the Guebers and Parsees of Persia and India; a fire-worshiper.

Zoroastrianism (zō-rō-as'tri-an-izm), n. [< Zoroastrian + -ism.] The system of religious doctrine taught by Zoroaster and his followers in the Avesta; the religion prevalent in Persia till its overthrow by the Mohammedans in the seventh century, and still held by the Guebers and Parsees, and commonly, though incorrectly, called fire-worship. The religion is dual, recognizing two creative powers—Ormuzd (Ahuramazda), the god of light and creator of all that is good, with six principal and innumerable inferior amshaspands, or ministers of good, and Ahriman (Angra-mainyu), the god of darkness and creator of evil, with a corresponding number of devils, or ministers of evil. Zoroaster taught that Ormuzd created man with free will; that his state after death depends upon the preponderance of good or evil in his life, an intermediate state being provided for those in whom these principles are evenly balanced; and that Ormuzd will finally prevail over Ahriman in the constant war between them, and redeem him and his ministers, as well as man, from all evil.

Zoroastrism (zō-rō-as'trizm), n. [< L. Zoroastres, Zoroaster, + -ism.] Same as Zoroastrianism. [Rare.]

All these alleged facts conspire to prove that Zoroastrianism and its Scriptures had their origin in eastern Iran before the rise of Median or Persian dominion.

Amer. Antiq., IX. 118.

zorra (zōr'ā), n. [NL., < Sp. zorra, fem. of zorro, a fox.] A South American skunk: same as atok.

zorino (zō-rē'nō), n. [Sp. Amer., dim. of Sp. zorro, fox.] A South American skunk. The skunks of the Neotropical region belong to the same subfamily (Mephitis) as the others of America, but are generically different, and like the conepate.

zorro (zōr'ō), n. [Sp., a fox.] One of the South American fox-wolves, as Canis azaræ. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 353.

zorrico, n. [Basque.] A kind of song in quintuple or septuple rhythm common among the Basques.

Zosmeridae (zos-mer'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Douglas and Scott, 1865), < Zosmerus + -idae.] A family of heteropterous insects, of the superfamily Coreoidea, forming a transition between the Lygaeidae and the Tingitidae, but by the structure of the abdomen more nearly related to the former than to the latter. It contains only the Old World genus Zosmerus.

Zosmerus (zos'mē-rus), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1833), irreg. < Gr. ζῶμα, a girdle, < ζωωμι, girdle.] A genus of Old World heteropterous insects, typical of the family Zosmeridae.

zoster (zōs'tēr), n. [< Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle, < ζωωμι, girdle: see zone.] 1. In anc. Gr. costume, a belt or girdle; originally, a warriors' belt round the loins, afterward any girdle or zone, but chiefly one of a kind worn by men.

The chiton . . . is girt round under the breast, to keep it from falling, by a girdle (zoster). Encyc. Brit., VI. 453.

2. Same as herpes zoster (which see, under herpes).

Zostera (zos-tē'rā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so called from the long tape-like leaves; < Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle: see zoster.] A genus of aquatic plants, of the order Naiadaceæ, type of the tribe Zostereæ. It is characterized by monocious flowers and ovoid carpels. The 4 species are natives of marine waters of both the Old and the New World. They grow immersed in shallow bays and other waters, often forming large masses, growing from slender creeping rootstocks. The long narrowly linear two-ranked leaves are the place of attachment of great numbers of algae, and the feeding-places of many of the smaller forms of animal life. Z. marina is known in America as eel-grass and in England

1. Flowering plant of Zostera marina, or eel-grass. 2. The spathe, a, anther, b, pistil, c, fruit.

as grass-wrack, also as turtle-grass, sweet-grass, and belt-weave; when dried, it is used, under the name of alba marina, sea-sedge, or sea-hay, for stuffing mattresses and as bedding for horses. This, together with the related Cymodocea æquorea, constitutes the glazier's-seaweed of England. Z. nana of Europe is known as dwarf grass-wrack.

Zostereæ (zos-tē'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Kunth, 1841), < Zostera + -eæ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Naiadaceæ. It is characterized by unisexual flowers on a flattened spathe without a perianth, and with a subulate or capillary stigma. The 2 genera, Phyllospadix and Zostera (the type), are submerged grassy plants of sea-water, the former including 2 species, both natives of the Pacific coast of the United States.

Zosterops (zos-tē'rops), n. [NL. (Vigors and Horsfield, 1826), < Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle, + ὄψ, eye.] 1. A very extensive genus of Meliphagidae (also referred to the Dicaeidae), giving name to the subfamily Zosteropinae, characterized among related genera by the absence or spurious character of the first primary, and named from the conspicuous orbital ring of most of its members. The genus is now held to cover a number of forms which have been made types of several (about 8) other genera. They are known as white-eyes and silver-eyes. The range of the genus in this broad sense is very extensive, embracing most of Africa, all of India, Ceylon, Burma, China, and Japan, the Malay Peninsula and Archipelago, the Papuan Islands, Australia, Tasmania, and most of the Polynesian islands, including New Zealand. The bill is about as long as the head, straight, and broad at the base. The pattern of coloration is characteristic, consisting of olives and yellows as the ground-colors, and the diagnostic white eye-ring of most species. The sexes are alike in plumage. The size is very small, only 4 or 5 inches. About 85 species are recognized as valid. The type is Z. cerulea, of Australia, the Chatham Islands, and New Zealand, the cerulean creeper, and rusty-sided warbler of the older ornithologists. Z. madagascariensis is the white-eyed warbler of Latham. Z. olivacea is the olive creeper of Bourbon (Réunion). Z. mauritiana is the Mauricie warbler of Mauritius. Z. lugubris, Z. borbonica, Z. chloronota, Z. fallax, Z. teuphiæna, Z. unicolor, Z. fuscus, and Z. senegalensis have severally been made types of other genera. Some of these birds have been placed in Dicaeum, and are among those known to the French ornithologists as sotimangas.

Silver-eye or White-eye. Zosterops cerulea.

2. [l. c.] Any bird of this genus.

zotheca (zō-thē'kā), n.; pl. zothecæ (-sē). [< Gr. ζῶθῆκη, < ζῶν, live, + θήκη, a receptacle: see theca.] In anc. arch., a niche or an alcove; also, a small living-room, or room used by day, as opposed to a sleeping-room or dormitory.

Zouave (zō-āv'), n. [F., from the name of a tribe inhabiting Algeria.] 1. A soldier belonging to a corps of light infantry in the French army, distinguished for their dash, intrepidity, and hardihood, and for their peculiar drill and showy Oriental uniform. The Zouaves were organized in Algeria in 1831, and consisted at first of two battalions chiefly of Kabyles and other natives, but ultimately became almost entirely French, with increased numbers. They served exclusively in Algeria till 1854, and afterward fought in European wars.

2. A member of one of the volunteer regiments of the Union army in the American civil war (1861-5) which adopted the name and to some extent imitated the dress of the French Zouaves.—Papal or pontifical Zouaves, a corps of French soldiers organized at Rome in 1860 for the defense of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope, under Gen. Lamoricière, one of the first commanders of the Algerian Zouaves. After obstinately resisting the entrance of the Italian government into Rome in 1870, they served in France against the Germans and the Commune, and in 1871 were disbanded.

Zouave-jacket (zō-āv'jak'et), n. 1. A short jacket, not reaching to the waist, cut away in front: a part of the Zouave uniform.—2. A similar jacket, usually ornamented, with or without sleeves, worn by women.

sounds (zoundz), interj. [For 's'ounds, abbr. of God's wounds, referring to the wounds of Christ on the cross; one of the innumerable oaths having reference to Christ's passion.] An exclamation formerly used as an oath or as an expression of anger or wonder.

Zounds, sir! then I insist on your quitting the room directly. Sheridan, School for Scandal, v. 3.

zoutch (zouch), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To stew, as flounders, whittings, gudgeons, eels, etc., with just enough of liquid to cover them. [Prov. Eng.]

Zr. In chem., the symbol for zirconium.

zucchetta (tsuk-ket'tā), n. [It. zucchetta, a small gourd, a skullcap, dim. of zucca, a gourd.] 1. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., the skullcap of an ecclesiastic, covering the tonsure. That of a priest is black, of a bishop purple, of a cardinal red, and of the Pope white. Also written zucchetto.—2. A late form of burbanet, distinguished by having a movable nasal, hinged cheek-pieces, and an articulated couvre nuque.

zufolo, zuffolo (zō'fō-lō), n. [It. zufolo, < zufolare, hiss, whistle.] A little flute or flageolet, especially such as is used in teaching birds.

Zuggun falcon. See falcon.

zuisin, n. The American widgeon, Mareca americana. Webster's Dict., 1890. [Local, U. S.]

zules, zulis, n. In her., a chess rook used as a bearing.

Zulu (zō'lū), n. and a. [Also Zooloo; S. African.] I. n. A member of a warlike and superior branch of the Kafir race of South Africa, divided into many tribes. In the beginning of the nineteenth century several tribes of Zulus established a kingdom including the present British colony of Natal and the country north of it called Zululand, which was broken up and mostly absorbed by the British and the Boers during a succession of wars ending in 1883.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Zulus: as, the Zulu language (a principal member of the Bantu group of languages) or government.—Zulu cloth, a fine twilled woollen cloth used as a background for embroidery. Dict. of Needlework.

Zulu-Kafir (zō'lō-kaf'ēr), n. Same as Kafir, 3.

zumooruk (zum'ō-ruk), n. [Also zumooruck, zomboruk, zamboorak; < Hind. Pers. Ar. zambūrak, < Turk. zambūrak, a small gun, dim. of Ar. zambūr, a hornet.] A small cannon mounted on a swivel, usually shorter and with larger bore than the zingal. In English writings the name is especially applied to such a piece carried on a camel, the pivot which supports it being erected on the saddle in front of the rider.

Eighteen or twenty camels, caparisoned in the Rajah's colours of red and white, with zomboraks, or swivel guns, mounted on their backs.

W. H. Russell, Diary in India, II. 237.

zumic (zū'mik), a. An improper form of zymic. zumologic, zumology, etc. Same as zymologic, etc.

Zuñi (zō'nyē), n. [Amer. Ind.] A member of the best-known community or tribe of the semi-civilized Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, living in a village of the same name on the Zúñi river, composed of large communal houses.

Zuñian (zō'ni-an), a. and n. [< Zuñi + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Zuñis.

All the Zuñian clay effigies of owls have horns on their heads. Science, VI. 266.

II. n. A Zuñi.

zygolabialis (zī-gō-lā-bi-ā'lis), n.; pl. zygolabiales (-lēz). [NL., < zygo (ma) + labialis, labial.] The lesser zygomatic muscle; the zygomaticus minor. Cuvier, 1887. See first cut under muscle.
zygoma (zī-gō-mā), n.; pl. zygomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. ζυγία, the zygomatic arch, also a yoke, bolt, bar, < ζυγόν, yoke, join, < ζυγν, a yoke, joining; see *yoke*1.] 1. The bony arch or arcade of the cheek, formed by the malar or jugal bone and its connections; so called because it serves to connect bones of the face with those of the skull about the ear. In mammals, including man, the zygoma consists of a malar bone connected behind with the squamosal bone, usually by a zygomatic process of the latter, and abutting in front against a protuberance of the superior maxillary bone, or of the frontal or the lacrimal bone, or any of these. It is usually a stout Skull of Myotis, a gigantic extinct sloth, showing the massive zygoma 2, with strong superior and inferior processes, a. Greatly reduced.

bony arch, sometimes with a strong descending process, giving principal origin to a masseter muscle, and bridging over the temporal muscle. It is sometimes a slender rod, and may be imperfect, as in shrews. The part taken in its formation by the malar bone is very variable in extent. (See cut under skull.) Below mammals the construction of the zygoma posteriorly is entirely altered. In birds the arch is articulated there with the quadrate bone, or suspensorium of the lower jaw, representing the malleus of a mammal, and an additional bone, the quadratejugal, intervenes between the quadrate and the malar proper. In such cases the anterior connection is more particularly with the maxillary bone, or with this and the lacrimal, and the zygoma is generally a slender rod-like structure. (See cut under Gallinæ.) In reptiles further modifications occur, such as the completion of the arch behind by union of the jugal bone with the postfrontal and squamosal; or there may be no trace of a structure with the term zygoma is properly applicable, as in the Ophidia, in which there is no jugal or quadratejugal bone. Among batrachians, as the frog, a zygomatic arch is represented by the connection of the maxillary bone, by means of a quadratejugal bone, with a bone called temporomaxillaris (see cuts there and under Anura). In any case a zygoma consists of a suborbital or postorbital series of ossifications in membrane, or membrane-bones, developed on the outer side of the maxillary arch of the embryo (the same that gives rise to the pterygopalatine bar), and when best differentiated is represented by lacrimal, maxillary, jugal, and quadratejugal bones; and its connection with the sphenoid, as occurs in man, is quite exceptional.

2. The malar or jugal bone itself, without its connections. [Rare.]—3†. The cavity under the zygomatic process of the temporal bone; the zygomatic fossa. Brande.

zygomatice (zī-gō-mat'ik), a. [NL. zygomatice, < zygoma, q. v.] In zool., and anat., of or pertaining to the malar or jugal bone, or this bone and its connections; constituting or entering into the formation of the zygoma; jugal.—Zygomatic apophysis. Same as zygomatic process.—Zygomatic arch, the zygoma. See cut under skull.—Zygomatic bone, the malar.—Zygomatic canals, two canals in the malar bone of man, through which pass branches of the superior maxillary nerve; the temporomalar canals: (a) the zygomatofacial, or malar, running between the orbital and anterior surfaces; (b) the zygomatocotemporal, or temporal, running between the orbital and temporal surfaces.—Zygomatic crest, that edge of the human alisphenoid which articulates with the malar.—Zygomatic diameter, the greatest distance between the zygomatic arches of the skull.—Zygomatic fossa. See *fossa*1.—Zygomatic glands, lymph-nodes found along the course of the internal maxillary artery.—Zygomatic muscle. Same as zygomatice.—Zygomatic process. See process, and cuts under skull and *temporal*2.—Zygomatic suture, the squamozygomatic suture; the immovable connection of the squamosal, usually of its zygomatic process, with the malar or jugal bone.—Zygomatic tuberosity, that protuberance of the superior maxilla which articulates with the malar.

zygomatice, n. Plural of zygomatice.

zygomatice-auricular (zī-gō-mat'ik-ō-ā-rik'ū-lār), a. 1. In anat. and zool., of or pertaining to the zygoma and the auricle; as, a zygomatice-auricular muscle. See zygomatice-auricularis.—2. In craniom., noting the ratio between the zygomatic and auricular diameters of the skull, called the zygomatice-auricular index.

zygomatice-auricularis (zī-gō-mat'ik-ō-ā-rik'ū-lār'is), n. A muscle of the external ear of some animals, which arises from the zygoma and is inserted in the auricle; in man, the atrahens aurem.

A strong zygomatice-auricularis is also seen as we remove the integuments of the head (of the reindeer). Proc. Acad. Nat. Sci. Phila., 1891, p. 232.

zygomaticefacial (zī-gō-mat'ik-ō-fā'shal), a. In anat., of or pertaining to the zygoma and the face; specifying (a) the anterior connections of the zygoma, and (b) the anterior one of the two zygomatic canals which traverse the malar bone of man. See zygomatic canals, under zygomatic.

zygomaticeotemporal (zī-gō-mat'ik-ō-tem'pō-rāl), a. In anat., of or pertaining to the zygoma and the temporal bone or fossa; specifying (a) the posterior connections of the zygoma with any element of the temporal bone, as the squamozygomatic of a mammal, and (b) the posterior one of the two zygomatic canals which traverse the malar bone of man. See zygomatic canals, under zygomatic.

zygomatice (zī-gō-mat'ik-us), n.; pl. zygomatice (-sī). [NL.; see zygomatic.] One of several small subcutaneous muscles arising from or in relation with the zygoma, or malar bone.—Zygomaticus auricularis, a muscle of the external ear, the atrahens aurem of man, commonly called zygomatice-auricularis (which see).—Zygomaticus major, zygomatice minor, two muscles of the face, arising from the malar bone, inserted into the orbicularis oris at the corner of the mouth, and serving to draw the corner of the mouth upward and outward, as in the act of laughing. The former is sometimes called distortor oris, and the latter zygolabialis. See first cut under *muscle*1.

zygomorphic (zī-gō-mōr'fik), a. [< zygomorphous + -ic.] In bot., same as zygomorphous.

zygomorphism (zī-gō-mōr'fiz'm), n. [< zygomorphous + -ism.] The character of being zygomorphous.

zygomorphous (zī-gō-mōr'fus), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + μορφή, form.] Yoke-shaped; specifically applied to flowers which can be bisected into similar halves in only one plane; monosymmetrical. Sachs extends the term to cases where bisection into similar halves is possible in two planes at right angles to one another, the halves of one section being different from the halves of the other. Goebel. Compare actinomorphic.

zygomorphy (zī'gō-mōr'fi), n. [< zygomorphous + -y.] In bot., same as zygomorphism.

zygomycete (zī-gō-mī'sēt), n. In bot., a fungus belonging to the group Zygomycetes.

Zygomycetes (zī'gō-mī-sē'tēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + μύκης, pl. μύκητες, a mushroom.] A group of fungi characterized by the production of zygospores. It embraces the Mucorini, Entomophthoræ, Chytridiaceæ, Ustilaginæ, etc.

zygomycetous (zī'gō-mī-sē'tus), a. In bot., of or pertaining to the Zygomycetes.

zygon (zī'gon), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, a yoke, cross-bar; see *yoke*1.] 1. A connecting rod or bar; a yoke in general.

Zygal fissures are defined as "H-shaped or quadrilateral, presenting a pair of branches at either end of a connecting bar or yoke, the zygon." A zygal fissure contains a bar or zygon, a yoke in the most general sense. B. G. Wilder.

2. In anat., an H-shaped fissure of the brain, as the paroccipital fissure. It consists of anterior and posterior stipes, anterior and posterior rami, and the connecting bar (the zygon in strictness). B. G. Wilder.

Zygonectes (zī-gō-nek'tēz), n. [NL. (Agassiz, 1854), so called because said to swim in pairs; < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + νήκτης, swimmer.] A large genus of small carnivorous American cyprinodonts; the top-minnows. They are closely related to the killifishes (Fundulus), the technical difference being chiefly in the smallness and backwardness of the dorsal fin, which has usually less than ten rays and is commonly inserted behind the front of the anal fin. The top-minnows are on the average smaller than the killifishes, being usually only 2 or 3 inches long. They are surface swimmers, and feed on insects. The species are numerous, and individuals abundant. One of the best-known is Z. notatus, common in ponds from Michigan to Alabama and Texas.

Zygopetalum (zī-gō-pet'a-lum), n. [NL. (Hooker, 1827), so called with ref. to the union of the perianth with the foot of the column; < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + πέταλον, leaf (petal).] A genus of epiphytic orchids, of the tribe Vandææ and subtribe Cyrtopodææ. It is characterized by showy solitary or loosely racemed flowers with spreading sepals, the lateral ones united to the short foot of the incurved column; by a flatish lip, bearing a transverse crest at its base; and by an anther with four obovoid pollen-masses, attached by a rather broad stalk or gland. There are about 50 species, natives of tropical America from the West Indies and Mexico to Brazil. They are handsome plants with short leafy stems finally thickened into pseudobulbs. Their leaves are two-ranked, membranous or somewhat rigid, and slightly plicate or with elevated veins. They are highly prized in cultivation under glass, especially Z. Mackaili, the original species.

Zygophyceæ (zī-gō-fis'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + φυκός, seaweed, + -aceæ.] A group or order of unicellular or multicellular freshwater algae, not now generally accepted, with the cells single, or segregate, or geminate, or united in a series. Multiplication is effected by division in one direction, and by means of zygospores resulting from the conjugation of the cells. It embraces the families Desmidiaceæ, Zygnemaceæ, etc.

Zygophyllaceæ (zī'gō-fil'ā-sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Zygophyllum + -aceæ.] Same as Zygophyllaceæ.

Zygophylleæ (zī-gō-fil'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (R. Brown, 1814), < Zygophyllum + -æ.] An order of polypetalous plants, the bean-caper family, belonging to the series Discifloræ and the cohort Geraniales. It is characterized by flowers which usually bear a fleshy disk, five free glandless sepals, filaments augmented each by a small scale, and a furrowed angled or lobed ovary with two or more filiform ovules in each of the four or five cells. It includes about 110 species, classed in 18 genera, natives of tropical and warm climates, especially north of the equator. They are commonly shrubs or herbs with a woody base, bearing divaricate branches jointed at their nodes. Their leaves are usually opposite and pinnate or composed of two entire leaflets; the twin persistent stipules are sometimes developed into spines. The flowers are white, red, or yellow, very rarely blue, usually solitary in the axils of the stipules. The principal genera are Zygophyllum (the type), Tribulus, Guaiacum, and Fagonia; 10 genera are monotypic; two species of Guaiacum (lignum-vitæ) become moderate trees. The woody species are remarkable for the extreme hardness of their wood, and several, as Guaiacum, produce a bitter and acrid bark. Their detensive foliage is used in the West Indies to scour floors. Some of the family are so abundant in the Egyptian desert as to constitute a characteristic feature of its vegetation.

Zygophyllum (zī-gō-fil'um), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737), < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + φύλλον, leaf.] A genus of plants, type of the order Zygophyllaceæ. It is characterized by opposite bifoliate leaves, flowers with four or five petals, and a sessile ovary with the ovules fixed upon the axis. There are about 60 species, natives of the Old World and of Australia. They are diminutive shrubs, often prostrate, and with spinescent branches. The leaves are opposite, usually composed of two fleshy leaflets armed at the base with spines which represent stipules. The flowers are white or yellow, usually marked near the base with a purple or red spot. Z. Fabago is the bean-caper of the Levant; its flower-buds are used as capers. The aromatic seeds of Z. coccineum are used by the Arabs as pepper. Several species are of local medicinal repute. Z. Fabago as a vermifuge, and Z. simplex, an Arabian plant of nauseous odor, as a remedy for diseases of the eye.

zygophyte (zī'gō-fit), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + φυτόν, plant.] A plant characterized by the production of zygospores; a plant in which reproduction consists in a confluence of two similar protoplasmic masses. See cut under conjugation, 4.

In most of these zygophytes there is no plain distinction of sex. G. L. Goodale, Physiol. Bot., p. 439.

zygopleural (zī-gō-plō'ral), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + πλευρά, side.] Bilaterally symmetrical in a strict sense. Zygopleural forms are distinguished as dipleural and tetrapleural.

Zygosaurus (zī-gō-sā'rus), n. [NL. (Eichwald, 1848), < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σαῦρος, lizard.] A genus of labyrinthodonts, based on Z. lucius from the Middle Permian of Perm in Russia.

zygose (zī'gōs), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + -ose after zygosis.] In bot., pertaining to or characteristic of zygosis or conjugation.

Zygoselmidae (zī-gō-sel'mī'dæ), n. pl. [NL., < Zygoselmis + -idæ.] A family of dimastigote eustomatous flagellate infusorians, named from the genus Zygoselmis. They have two similar vibratile flagella, and the endoplasm includes no pigmentary bands.

Zygoselmis (zī-gō-sel'mis), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σέλμη, noose.] The typical genus of Zygoselmidae. These animalcules are highly plastic and variable in form, with two unequal flagella from the fore end, at the base of which are the mouth and pharynx. Z. nebulosa and Z. inæqualis inhabit fresh water.

zygosis (zī-gō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ζύγωσις, a joining (used in sense of balancing), < ζυγών, join, yoke; see zygoma.] 1. Asexual intercourse of protoplasmic bodies, resulting in their confluence and coalescence; the process and result of conjugation in protozoans or other of the lowest organisms. See conjugation, 4.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Förster, 1869).] A genus of hymenopterous insects.—3. In bot., conjugation; the fusion or union of two distinct cells or protoplasmic masses for reproduction. See conjugation, 4.

zygosperm (zī'gō-spērm), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., same as zygospore.

zygosphen (zī'gō-sfēn), n. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σφήν, wedge.] In herpet., the wedge-shaped process from the fore part of the neural arch

zyme (zî'mō-jen), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, < ζῆμι, boil; ζῆμι, boil.] 1. A ferment.

A ferment is a substance which, by the same thing, and, as a result of its action, produces the term zymotic has arisen.

Nature, 18th Century, XXIV, 843.

2. The living germ or other poison, of whatever nature, which is believed to be the specific cause of a fermental disease.

zymic (zî'mîk), a. [Also improperly zymic; < ζῆμι, boil.] Pertaining to or of the nature of leaven: applied by Pasteur to the microbes which act as ferments only when the air is excluded, as distinguished from those which require the presence of air.

zymogen (zî'mō-jen), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + γένεσις, producing.] A substance from which an enzyme may be formed by internal change. Also zymogon.

A ferment is found to exist as a zymogen in the resting state, which is usually developed by warmth and weak acids into an active condition. Nature, XL, 389.

zymogenic (zî'mō-jen'ik), a. [As zymogen + -ic.] Exciting fermentation: as, zymogenic organisms.

zymogenous (zî-moj'e-nus), a. [As zymogen + -ous.] Same as zymogenic.

zymoid (zî'moid), a. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling a zyme or ferment.

zymologic (zî-mō-loj'ik), a. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + λογία, study.] Of or pertaining to zymology. Also zymologic.

zymological (zî-mō-loj'ik), a. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + λογία, study.] Same as zymologic.

zymologist (zî-mōl'ō-jist), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + λογία, study.] One who is skilled in zymology. Also zymologist.

zymology (zî-mōl'ō-jî), n. [Also zumology; < Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + λογία, < ζῆμι, speak; see -ology.] The science of or knowledge concerning fermentation.

zymolysis (zî-mōl'i-sis), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + λυσις, dissolving.] Same as zymosis, 1.

zymolytic (zî-mō-lit'ik), a. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + λυσις, dissolving.] Same as zymotic.

Prof. Salkowski . . . concluded from his researches that fermentative (zymolytic) processes are continually taking place in living tissues. Nature, XL, 599.

zymome (zî'mōm), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, a fermented mixture, < ζῆμα, leaven, ferment, < ζῆμι, leaven: see zyme.] An old name for the gluten of wheat that is insoluble in alcohol. Also zimomi.

zymometer (zî-mom'e-tēr), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the degree of fermentation of a fermenting liquor. Also zymosimeter.

zymophyte (zî-mō-fit), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + φυτόν, plant.] A bacterioid ferment that liberates fatty acids from neutral fats. Billings.

zymoscope (zî'mō-skōp), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument, contrived by Zenneck, for testing the fermenting power of yeast, by bringing it in contact with sugar-water and observing the quantity of carbonic anhydride evolved. Watts.

zymosimeter (zî-mō-sim'e-tēr), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, fermentation, + μέτρον, measure.] Same as zymometer.

zymosis (zî-mō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῆμα, fermentation, < ζῆμα, ferment: see zyme.] 1. Fermentation of any kind. Also zymolysis.— 2. An infectious or contagious disease.

zymotechnic (zî-mō-tek'nik), a. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + τέχνη, art.] Relating to the art of inducing and managing such fermentations as are useful in the arts; pertaining to zymotechnics.

zymotechnical (zî-mō-tek'ni-kal), a. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + τέχνη, art.] Same as zymotechnic.

zymotechnics (zî-mō-tek'niks), n. [Pl. of zymotechnic (see -ics).] The art of managing fermentation. Compare zymurgy.

zymotic (zî-mōt'ik), a. and n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + τικτός, fermenting: see zymosis.] 1. a. Pertaining to fermentation; of the nature of fermentation. Also zymolytic.— Zymotic disease, any disease, such as malaria, typhoid fever, or smallpox, the origin and progress of which are due to the multiplication within the body of a living germ introduced from without. Zymotic papilloma, frambæsia.

II. n. Same as zymotic disease. See 1. zymotically (zî-mōt'ik-ly), adv. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + τικτός, fermenting: see zymosis.] In a zymotic manner; according to the manner or nature of zymotic diseases.

zymurgy (zî-mēr-jî), n. [Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + ἐργον, work (cf. metallurgy, etc.).] That department of technological chemistry which treats of the scientific principles of wine-making, brewing, and distilling, and the preparation of yeast and vinegar, in which processes fermentation plays the principal part. Watts.

Zyrichthys, n. See Xyrichthys, Swainson, 1839.

zytheparyt (zî-thep'sa-ri), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, + ἐργον, work (cf. metallurgy, etc.).] A brewery or brew-house. [Rare.]

zythum (zî'thum), n. [L. zythum, < Gr. ζῆμα, leaven, applied to the beer of Egypt and also to that of the northern nations (κοῖνη).] A kind of beer made by the ancient Egyptians.

Zygomma (zik-som'ā), n. [NL. (Rambur, 1842), prop. **Zeugomma*, < Gr. ζῆμα, a joining (< ζῆμα, join), + ὄμμα, eye: see ommatidium.] A genus of Indian dragon-flies, of the family Libellulidae, having the head large, the face narrow, the eyes of great size, and the first three abdominal segments vesicular.

LIST OF AMENDED SPELLINGS

RECOMMENDED BY THE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON AND THE AMERICAN PHILOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION

THE American Philological Association, giving voice to the general opinion of the most eminent scholars in English philology, as reflected in previous discussions in that body and elsewhere and expressed in the annual reports of a special committee, adopted and published, in 1876, a declaration in favor of a reform in English spelling. That declaration, as printed in the List of Amended Spellings subsequently recommended by the Association, is as follows:

1. The true and sole office of alphabetic writing is faithfully and intelligibly to represent spoken speech. So-called "historical" orthography is only a concession to the weakness of prejudice.
2. The ideal of an alphabet is that every sound should have its own unvarying sign, and every sign its own unvarying sound.
3. An alphabet intended for use by a vast community need not attempt an exhaustive analysis of the elements of utterance and a representation of the nicest varieties of articulation; it may well leave room for the unavoidable play of individual and local pronunciation.
4. An ideal alphabet would seek to adopt for its characters forms which should suggest the sounds signified, and of which the resemblances should in sum measure represent the similarities of the sounds. But for general practical use there is no advantage in a system which aims to depict in detail the physical processes of utterance.
5. No language has ever had, or is likely to have, a perfect alphabet; and in changing and amending the mode of writing of a language already long written regard must necessarily be had to what is practically possible quite as much as to what is inherently desirable.
6. To prepare the way for such a change, the first step is to break down, by the combined influence of enlightened scholars and of practical educators, the immense and stubborn prejudice which regards the established modes of spelling almost as constituting the language, as having a sacred character, as in themselves preferable to others. All agitation and all definite proposals of reform are to be welcomed so far as they work in this direction.
7. An altered orthography will be unavoidably offensive to those who are first called upon to use it; but any sensible and consistent new system will rapidly win the hearty preference of the mass of writers.
8. The Roman alphabet is so widely and firmly established in use among the leading civilized nations that it cannot be displaced; in adapting it to improved use for English, the efforts of scholars should be directed towards its use with uniformity, and in conformity with other nations.

In pursuance of this declaration, further action was taken by the Association from year to year; and, a similar declaration having been made by the Philological Society of London, the two bodies agreed, in 1883, upon certain rules (the Twenty-four Rules) for the correction of the orthography of certain words and classes of words. Subsequently an alphabetical list of the principal words covered by the rules was made. "The corrections are in the interest of etymological and historical truth, and are to be confined to words which the changes do not much disguise from the general reader." The rules are printed in the "Proceedings" of the American Philological Association for 1883. The list was printed in the "Transactions" for 1886, and later in the periodical "Spelling," in October, 1887, from which it is here reprinted, with some slight corrections.

In the following list, as in the Twenty-four Rules, many amendable words have been omitted for reasons such as these: 1. The changed word would not be easily recognized, as nee for knee. 2. Letters are left in strange positions, as in edg for edge, casq for casque. 3. The word is of frequent use. Final g = j, v, g, z, and syllabic l and n, are strange to our print but abundant in our speech. Many of them are in the list: hav, freez, singl, eatn, etc.; but iz for is, ov for of, and many other words, as well as the final z = s of inflections, are omitted. 4. The wrong sound is suggested, as in vag for vague, acer for acre. 5. A valuable distinction is lost: casque from cash, dost from dust.

Unusual words having a familiar change of ending, as -le to -l, and simple derivatives and inflections, are often omitted. Words doubtful in pronunciation or etymology, and words undecided by the Associations, however amendable, are omitted. Inflections are printed in italics.

The so-called Twenty-four Rules are many of them lists of words. The rules proper are as follows:

TEN RULES.

1. e.—Drop silent e when phonetically useless (writing -er for -re), as in live (liv), single (singl), eaten (eatn), rained (raind), etc., theatre (theater), etc.

The list is printed here as a record of an important movement which promises to be of special interest to lexicographers in the near future, and as a recognition, in addition to the remarks made in the Preface (p. ix), of the desirableness of correcting the anomalies and redundancies of English spelling in the directions indicated. It is the main office of a dictionary to record actual usage, not to recommend better usage; but in cases of unsettled usage it must adopt, and thus by inference recommend, one form as against the rest; and, in view of the fact that the amended spellings in question have been recommended by the highest philological authorities in the English-speaking world, and that they have been to a considerable extent already adopted, in whole or in part, by many respectable newspapers and other periodicals, and by a large number of persons in private use, besides those who take part in the agitation for spelling reform, they can hardly be ignored in a dictionary which records without wincing the varying orthography of times just past, and of earlier generations. The reformed orthography of the present, made with scientific intent and with a regard for historic and phonetic truth, is more worthy of notice, if a dictionary could discriminate as to worthiness between two sets of facts, than the oftentimes capricious and ignorant orthography of the past.

It need not be said in this dictionary that the objections brought on etymological and literary and other grounds against the correction of English spelling are the unthinking expressions of ignorance and prejudice. All English etymologists are in favor of the correction of English spelling, both on etymological grounds and on the higher ground of the great service it will render to national education and international intercourse. It may safely be said that no competent scholar who has really examined the question has come, or could come, to a different conclusion; and it may be confidently predicted that future English dictionaries will be able to recognize to the full, as this dictionary has been able in its own usage to recognize in part, the right of the English vocabulary to be rightly spelled.

It is to be noted that many of the corrected spellings in the following list are merely reversions to a simpler mode of spelling formerly common; indeed, such is largely the intent of the list. Examples are engin, genuin, wil, shrill, and the like, and especially verbal forms like dropt, kist, mist, tost, etc.—a mode of spelling in use for more than a thousand years (compare Anglo-Saxon cyste, English kist; Anglo-Saxon miste, English mist, etc.), and still familiar in the usage of the best modern poets, as Tennyson and Lowell (leapt, mist, tost are in Lowell's last poem, "My Brook," December, 1890). All considerations, historical, literary, and economical, are in favor of such corrected forms.

W. D. WHITNEY.

2. ea.—Drop a from ea having the sound of e, as in feather (fether), leather (lether), etc.
3. o.—For o having the sound of u in but write u in above (abuv), tongue (tung), and the like.
4. ou.—Drop o from ou having the sound of u in but in trouble (trubl), rough (ruf), and the like; for -our unaccented write -or, as in honour (honor), etc.
5. u, ue.—Drop silent u after g before a, and in native English words, and drop final ue: guard (gard), guess (gess), catalogue (catalog), league (leag), etc.
6. D.—Drop consonants may be simplified when phonetically useless: bailiff (baillif) (not hall, etc.), battle (batl), written (writn), traveller (traveler), etc.
7. d.—Change d and ed final to t when so pronounced, as in looked (lookt), etc., unless the e affects the preceding sound, as in chafed, etc.
8. gh, ph.—Change gh and ph to f when so sounded: enough (enuf), laughter (lafter), phonetic (fonetic), etc.
9. s.—Change s to z when so sounded, especially in distinctive words and in -ise: abuse, verb (abuze), advertise (advertize), etc.
10. t.—Drop t in teh: catch (cach), pitch (pich), etc.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTE TO PREFACE.

DURING the publication of the dictionary but one change has occurred in the staff of specialists mentioned in the preface issued with the first part. While the proofs of "T" were coming from the press, Dr. James K. Thacher, who had labored upon the dictionary from its beginning, died, leaving his work upon the last letters of the alphabet unfinished. The task of completing it was taken up by Dr. Thomas L. Stehman, and has been carried through by him.

The dictionary has also received additional aid from many others not mentioned in the preface. Help has thus been given most notably by Prof. Charles A. Young, in many important definitions (in particular those of the words sun, solar, telescope, and lens) and in continuous criticism of the final proofs; by Prof. Thomas Gray, of Rose Polytechnic Institute, in electrical definitions; by Mr. George E. Curtis, of the Smithsonian Institution, and Prof. Cleveland Abbe, in definitions of meteorological terms; by Mr. Edward S. Burgess, Mr. E. S. Steele of the National Museum, Mr. F. V. Coville of the United States Department of Agriculture, Prof. N. L. Britton of Columbia College, and the late Dr. J. I. Northrop, also of Columbia, in botany; by Mr. Leicester Allen, in definitions of mechanical terms; by Prof. S. W. Williston, of the University of Kansas, in medicine and physiology; by Dr. Theobald Smith, of the United States Department of Agriculture, in veterinary pathology and surgery; by Lieut. Arthur P. Nazro, in naval and nautical definitions; by Capt. John W. Collins, of the United States Fish Commission, in material relating to fishing and the fisheries; by Prof. William H. Brewer, of Yale University, in many definitions, particularly those of the gaits of horses; by Mr. A. D. Risteen, in certain mathematical definitions; by Rev. George T. Packard, in the preliminary arrangement of certain literary material; by Mr. Austin Dobson, in the definitions of the names of various forms of verse; by Prof. Douglas Sladen, in the collection of Australian provincialisms and colloquialisms; and in various special matters by Dr. Edward Eggleston, Mr. George Kenman, Mr. George W. Cable, Mr. G. W. Pettes, and many others.

The staff of editorial assistants has been enlarged by the addition of Miss Katharine G. Brewster, and of Roy George McArthur, to whom special recognition is due for his efficient revision of the final proofs.
